GUILTY PLEAS BY 3 KIDNAPERS

HEARST RANCH, SAN SIMEON, Cal., Nov. 29—London reports, through Universal Service, that Britain is sending a second note explaining "inability" to pay the debt installment of $95,500,000 in December.

There can be no question of "inability," since the British have now, in the Bank of England's vaults, enough GOLD to pay that debt seven times over.

All Americans, and many Englishmen, will agree with a statement, cabled to London at the request of Reynolds' Illustrated News, and republished in the London Daily Telegraph, in which W. R. Hearst says, "It is inconceivable that a great commercial nation, a great business nation, like England, would evade the payment of an honest debt."

"The statement that England needs the money is not relevant," says Mr. Hearst. "America also needs the money * * * America has more war debt, more deficit, more unemployed—in fact, more depression."

Britain, according to Montagu Norman, of the Bank of England, wishes to avoid the unpleasant word "default," but the only way to evade that is to PAY. The pound dropped to $3.15¾ today, the lowest level ever reached, which means worry.

Speaker Garner has prepared a prohibition resolution demanding, subject to legal ratification, that "THE EIGHTEENTH ARTICLE OF AMENDMENT IS HEREBY REPEALED."

That would allow each of the 48 States to deal with drink in its own way, as in old days, before bootlegging and crime became the greatest industry of the United States.

Whether the amendment to the Constitution, eliminating the 18th Amendment, would be ratified by 36 of the States is the question, and the answer, now, is NO. If Congress wants to do anything about prohibition, it must change the Volstead law.

Yesterday the Ministers' Association of Los Angeles adopted a resolution calling on Congress not to repeal prohibition, but to [illegible]orce prohibition more vigor[illegible]ly, alleging that CRIME [illegible]L INCREASE WITH THE [illegible]URN OF BEER AND [illegible]E. [illegible] association of ministers can hardly be mistaken, but it is not easy to imagine how the crime could increase much.

Does any clergyman believe that there is less crime now than before prohibition started?

Billy Sunday, always sincere and forceful, made an impassioned plea for more and better prohibition, revealing what he called the source of our ills.

"Infidel evolutionists, university teachings, modernism and liberalism" are responsible for our troubles.

Geneva reports that Japan will demand revision of the 5-5-3 ratio of the London navy treaty, making Japan inferior to Britain and this country on the sea, as 3 is to 5.

Japan will demand abolition of aircraft carriers and a larger quota of submarines for Japan.

Why not let Japan and other powers build whatever they WANT, while this country builds whatever it NEEDS without asking anybody's advice or consent.

What we NEED is such weapons as would enable us to destroy the shipping and principal cities of any nation foolish enough to attack us, and that is what we ought to HAVE.

Did you ever hear an aged, rheumatic person describe his symptoms in painful detail? Wall Street was such a person yesterday. There was the lowest price on record for the pound, the lowest for silver, all-time lows in some cotton options, wheat trembling on the brink, bonds soft.

In that land of "water, water everywhere," there is gloom now. Before long faces will be smiling, and everybody will pretend that "he bought them when they were low." He did not, but he will buy them when they are high.

Hindenburg, justly called "Germany's Rock of Gibraltar," has selected, but not yet named the cabinet that will carry Germany through the winter.

"Drastic economies and increased government construction projects to alleviate unemployment" are parts of the German program that this country should copy.

W. P. Hearst's grandchildren, boy and girl twins five years old, who flew here from Los Angeles a week ago, flew home

New York, Nov. 29 (P)—A modern "Flying Dutchman," a trawler captured after a chase in lower New York bay and found to have no one aboard, was tied up at the coast guard base at Staten Island today.

A search of the boat disclosed sh had aboard 1000 cases of champagne, liquors, brandy and whiskey, all neatly packed in burlap bags and valued by coast guardsmen at $70,000.

The seizure was made in the dark yesterday morning after the lookout on a coast guard picket boat sighted the trawler, with no running lights, traveling at a fast clip toward shore. The "heave to" order of the chief boatswain's mate ignored, the picket boat gave chase and in ten minutes overhauled its quarry.

Even then the trawler did not slacken speed. The coast guardsmen managed to hook their boat to the trawler and board her. A search then disclosed there was no one aboard.

SEIZED HOUR AFTER BANK HOLDUP

Through the means of radio and teletype, two men were arrested in Connecticut today only one hour and 26 minutes after the North Brookfield Savings Bank was held up and robbed of $1200.

Within an hour thereafter Gordon Nauss of Hudson st., Hartford, one of the two men captured, was identified as one of the bank robbers. His companion, William Putnam, of Anne st., also of Hartford, confessed, police said, [illegible] driven the robbers' car[illegible].

Two unidentified m[illegible] have taken part in th[illegible] which Treasurer Ge[illegible] and Janitor Daniel M[illegible] trussed up, were understood to have separated from their companions at Worcester.

According to Capt. Beaupre of the state police here, two new $10 bills, believed to be part of the loot from the bank were found on the person of Putnam, owner of the car which was stopped.

IDENTIFIED BY JANITOR

He ordered Lieut. William V. Shimkus of the Holden barracks to go to Stafford Springs with Treasurer Brown and bring Putnam and Nauss back to Massachusetts.

Nauss was said to have been picked up from a line-up at Staford Springs, Ct. where the arrests were made by Janitor McGuire, who had been rushed there by machine after the men were captured.

The robbers escaped in Treasurer Brown's car, later transferring to a Connecticut-registered machine in which a driver waited for them. This machine is believed to have proceeded to Worcester, where two of the robbers are thought to have boarded a train.

The arrests resulted from Massasetts State police broadcasts, by air and wire, that three men had robbed the savings bank after binding the treasurer and janitor and waiting for the timelock to open.

The robbery was apparently carefully planned and coolly executed, while the capture of the two men was carried out with almost military precision and in remarkably fast time

Paris, Nov. 29 (INS)—Premier Edouard Herriot of France today [illegible]ed to stake the fate of his [illegible]net on the war debt issue.

[illegible]e premier's decision was made [illegible]the face of apparently unani[illegible]s opposition in the Chamber o[illegible] Deputies to payment of the debt installment due the United States Dec. 15.

Herriot, it was announced by Paul Marchandeau, Under-Secretary of State, will go before the Chamber on Thursday and ask for a vote of confidence, demanding a free hand to carry on the present war debt negotiations.

Herriot will ask the Chamber to give him the confidence vote in place of voting on a proposal by Louis Marin, Right Nationalist leader, which if passed would be tantamount to a warning that the Chamber would refuse to ratify the payment.

"The premier would prefer to fall on a technicality rather than the definite question of 'to pay or not to pay'," Marchandeau said.

Agide Jacchia, Former 'Pops' Leader, Dies

Agide Jacchia, director of the Boston Conservatory of Music and former conductor of the Boston Symphony "Pops" concerts, died of arthritis and pneumonia today in Siena, Italy.

His body will be cremated there.

He conducted the "Pops" from 1917 to 1926 and directed the Cecilia Society of Boston, from 1920 to 1924 and the Fitchburg Choral Society from 1923 to 1925. He had been director of the Boston Conservatory of Music since 1920.

Jacchia was very popular while conductor of the "Pops" and each successive season broke the record for attendance, but in 1926 he resigned after accusing the management of unbalancing his orchestra by releasing some of the players before the season ended.

His resignation caused a stir equaling that of 1920 when the American Federation of Musicians refused to let him conduct a union orchestra of 150 players in a performance of Aida at Braves Field, because the Symphony players were non-union.

Jacchia was a native of Lugo, Italy, and was 57 years old.

Doyle Bares Secrets of Kidnapers at Trial

An illuminating description of how the kidnapers of Herman Rutstein of Dorchester worked in trapping and handling their victim was given today by Asst. Dist.-Atty. Frederick T. Doyle, in his opening at the trial of the five alleged kidnapers.

The prosecutor's opening statement to the jury in superior court charged that Rutstein was only the first victim in a planned chain of kidnapings, with a man named Paradis slated to go second in the ransom plot.

Doyle said:

"We will show that on the night of Oct. 12 and for some time previous, Herman Rutstein lived with his family in Brinsley st., Dorchester, that he had formerly been engaged in the liquor business and that he knew the defendant Swartz, who had dealings with him in liquor for many years.

"We will show that opposite the Rutstein home there was a brick house where lived Morris Cohen. He occupied an apartment on the second floor, from the rear of which he could overlook the Rutstein home. We will show that Cohen was engaged in liquor deals in alliance with the defendant Addison. Cohen told us everything about Addison.

BECK LEADS G. O. P. WETS IN FIGHT FOR DRY REPEAL

GARNER'S PLANS FOR ACTION NEXT MONDAY ENDORSED

By WILLIAM R. NEAL
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Washington, Nov. 29—Republican wets in the House will be summoned into special session to consider the proposal of Speaker John N. Garner for passage of a prohibition repeal resolution on the opening of Congress next Monday.

Representative James M. Beck of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Republican "wet bloc," announced today he would support the outright repeal resolution framed by Garner after conferences with other Democratic leaders. The "wet bloc" session may be held this week, Beck said.

Strong Republican wets will make an appeal to the 95 "wet bloc" members to go down the line for submission of prohibition repeal to the states despite the fact that the Garner resolution differs from the Republican platform.

As plans went forward for a quick showdown on repeal, both wet and dry organizations began exerting pressure on returning members.

Adoption of the resolution, which must command two-thirds of the House, was in doubt, with predictions being made both ways by leaders in the fight.

A canvass of the declarations of the "lame duck" members indicated adoption is unlikely unless the Republican members now supporting the Hoover plan throw their full strength behind the movement.

"I have seen the resolution of the Speaker for outright repeal and I favor it," said Beck. "It differs somewhat from the Beck-Linthicum resolution. But I am opposed to writing statutes into the Constitution and believe the temper of the country has changed so much in the last six months that simple repeal would be approved.

"The plan of submitting repeal to conventions composed of delegates selected for that purpose is satisfactory.

OPPOSED BY BLANTON

Rep. Rainey of Illinois, Democratic leader, predicted the resolution would receive the necessary two-thirds majority.

Rep. Blanton (D.) of Texas, who had been erroneously reported as a "convert" to the wet ranks, said he would fight the resolution. He favors a national referendum vote on prohibition.

Rep. Collier (D.) of Mississippi, chairman of the ways and means committee, which will frame a beer bill, also expressed doubt as to success of the repeal movement.

NORRIS AGAINST REPEAL

Senate drys, watching the House action, declared outright repeal would be blocked. This view is shared by Senator Borah, Republican, of Idaho. Opposition to repeal of the prohibition amendment was announced by Senator Norris, Republican, of Nebraska, although he favors legalizing beer.

While the beer question was overshadowed temporarily by the fight for repeal, plans were being made for the House Ways and Means Committee beer hearings on December 7.

Collier said a majority of the brewers apparently had settled on 3 per cent beer as opposed to 2.75 per cent.

McNary Sees Congress "Dispose" of Repeal Bill

Washington, Nov. 29 (AP)—Senator McNary (R.), Oregon, today expressed to President Hoover an opinion that Congress could "dispose" of a prohibition repeal amendment before the Christmas holidays.

On leaving the White House he declined to amplify what he meant by "dispose," whether rejecting or enacting such a proposal.

Rep. Bachmann of West Virginia today told newspapermen that more than 100 Republicans would vote for the Garner repeal resolution when it is brought up in the House today.

Bachmann is the Republican whip and a member of the judiciary committee that on Friday will consider reporting the resolution.

WOMEN TO PLAN REPEAL FIGHT

New York, Nov. 29 (AP)—The women's organization for national prohibition reform has called a meeting for December 6 and 7 in Princeton, N. J., to map out its campaign "for unqualified repeal in the 72d Congress."

Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, national chairman, said her organization "is prepared to fight any resolution which does not return the full power of liquor control to the States."

CRISIS IN FRANCE OVER DEBT PAYMENT

he will face the chamber [illegible] Thursday and say:

"'I am now engaged in negotiating the war debt problems. Therefore the chamber should not take a responsibility which is mine at the moment. When I have chosen a solution, I shall submit it to the chamber, which then will have the privilee of accepting or rejecting it."

Opinion expressed in the corridors of the chamber was that Herriot's decision to ask a confidence vote under these conditions entails certain downfall.

London, Nov. 29—The new British note to Washington asking postponement of the $95,550,000 December war debt payment may be sent to the United States without the approval of the full British Cabinet.

This was the view expressed by Whitehall officials today following a meeting between Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald and leading members of the cabinet around the breakfast table in the prime minister's residence.

[illegible] al of the note by the cabinet is not necessary, since it does not involve final and vital decisions.

According to present arrangements, the note is ready for transmission to Washington tonight, with the possibility it may be held here until tomorrow for consideration by the full cabinet at the regular weekly meeting.

The entire government has been drawn into the discussion. King George requested and was given information by Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer.

NORMAN CALLED IN.

Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, was called in by Chamberlain for consultation.

Published speculation intimated the King would prefer to see Great Britain make the December payment if suspension were finally refused, feeling the tradition of an Englishman's word being his bond should be upheld.

Norman was believed to have pointed out to Chamberlain that prompt payment was necessary if demanded, holding that default would be disastrous to British credit.

GOLD PAYMENT URGED

Norman's persuasions were said to have strengthened the view that while the $65,500,000 interest should be duly paid, the United States should be asked to pass the $30,000,000 capital payment just now.

These same sources said Mr. Norman recommended payment mainly in gold, but partly in [illegible] that payment, if neces- [illegible] be made from the [illegible] gold note cover in the [illegible]land, seemed strength- [illegible] firmation could not be [illegible] until the cabinet revealed its intentions.

It was pointed out that £19,000,000 in gold would cover the requirements, while £30,000,000 in sterling notes would be needed.

Austria Fears Failure of $43,000,000 Loan

Vienna, Nov. 29 (AP)—Austria is watching with keen interest Europe's debt negotiations with the United States, for if France and England are compelled to pay on December 15, a loan voted to Austria at the Lausanne conference may not be ratified.

The League of Nations voted Austria a $43,000,000 loan last July, to be delivered when Austria should ratify an agreement to refrain from anything like the unsuccessful Austro-German Customs Union project, and when the loan should be ratified by nations guaranteeing it.

Austria reluctantly accepted the conditions, but the only guarantor to ratify has been Holland.

Malden Boy, 13, Dies Victim of Sleep Sickness

An autopsy will be performed to determine just what his ailment was.

The boy went to bed Saturday night as usual but on Sunday morning his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Acipito Colangeli, could not arouse him. He died without regaining consciousness. He was one of six children.

Europe's Bright, Like Red Ink

—By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER—

European financiers have one hope left in the debt problem. We might take a rubber check.

They've tried every kind of postponement there is except rain.

The moratorium evaporates in two weeks and Europe is as unhappy as a squirrel in a dead oak. The future is as bright as red ink.

Payment means that America is going to take another bite at earmarked gold. Accrued interest is coming home for the holidays. We have dunked our bread in the waters and it returneth in many days.

Our treasury is full now. But we want a couple of billion to use for window dressing. Tidy up the place a bit for Christmas.

Europe can borrow it again next year. We are always willing to do Europe a favor that only we can appreciate.

In the meantime it is going to be lovely in Washington with Ogden Mills humming softly to himself.

ROOSEVELT HAS PLAN TO AVOID EXTRA SESSION

Party Leaders Will Fight for Farm, Economy and Beer Bills Next Month

By RAYMOND I. BORST
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 29 (INS)—With the approval of President-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Democrats will battle at the "lame duck" session of Congress for modification of the Volstead law, enactment of farm relief measures and drastic reductions in federal government expenditures.

If these three major proposals are enacted at the short session, Gov. Roosevelt, it was revealed today, is convinced he will escape the necessity of calling a special session immediately after his inauguration next March.

The President-elect doesn't want a special session in the spring, but his advisers insist he will not hesitate to call one if any of the major Democratic program measures are sidetracked at the short session.

TO BLOCK NOMINATIONS

Following a two-hour conference with Mr. Roosevelt, Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, Democratic Senate chief, said the Senate would withhold confirmation of nearly all pending or new appointments by President Hoover with possibly a few exceptions.

"Indications are," said Robinson, "that executive nominations coming into the Senate during the short session will be carried over until after the new administration is inaugurated. It may be necessary to make exceptions, but no effort is being made now to decide what exceptions, if any, should be made."

Under the plans mapped by the Democrats, all judicial appointments, as well as postmasterships, will be held over until Mr. Roosevelt takes over the reins.

CHAPIN, CRISP FAVORED

Senator Robinson said the appointment of Roy D. Chapin as Secretary of Commerce would be confirmed. He also expects Representative Charles Crisp of Georgia will be confirmed as a member of the Tariff Commission.

Governor Roosevelt was scheduled to confer today with a group of members of the House Agriculture Committee, headed by Representative Marvin Jones of Texas. The President-elect also was to attend a meeting here of the Georgia Forestry Association.

Frank C. Walker, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, revealed today the committee has a deficit of about $700,000. About $300,000 of this was incurred in the recent campaign and the rest inherited from the regime of Former National Chairman John J. Raskob.

Mason of Dover-Foxcroft, manager of the Moosehead & Aroostook Telephone & Telegraph Company. He was the husband of Mrs. Eva Mason, vice-chairman of the Republican State committee. Death was caused by the fence stake piercing the body.

MOVE TO OUST HIM KILLED BY HOFSTADTER

N. Y. Probe Chairman Overrules Denunciation for Accepting Tammany Judgeship

New York, Nov. 29 (INS)—An unsuccessful attempt by two of the Republican majority members to remove Senator Samuel H. Hofstadter as chairman was made today as the legislative investigating committee, probing New York city finances, resumed hearings.

Hofstadter, after hearing his acceptance of a Supreme court nomination by Tammany Hall branded as "repugnant to decent standards of official conduct and repulsive to the public conscience," calmly ruled the ouster motion out of order, refused an appeal from his ruling and ordered the hearing to proceed.

"I ask for a vote," interrupted Rep. V. O. Moffat.

"Oh no," replied Hofstadter.

"You are trying to stifle this attempt to bring this matter out in the open," said Moffat. "You have declined to discuss it in open executive session and I now ask that a vote be taken in open eharing."

"I'm presiding over these session.," answered Hofstadter. "This is a mater for executive session. It is wholly foreign to the present proceedings."

NEW TAX BILL IS SEEN BY COLLIER

Washington, Nov. 29 (AP)—Because he thinks the billion-dollar tax bill passed last session did not raise the expected revenue, Chairman Collier of the House Ways and Means committee today said he thought it would be "compelled to take up another tax bill after the Christmas holidays."

"The outlook is for a deficit of $800,000,000 to a billion dollars on June 30," he said to newspapermen.

"Of course, that is just a guess, because we won't feel the full benefit of the new income taxes until March. But I am sure that what we get even then won't be enough to balance the budget."

$60,000 Opium Find Dumped Off Liner

Providence, Nov. 29—When the Fabre liner Sinaia docked here today it was announced that 273 packages of crude opium gum valued at $60,000 to $125,000 were tossed into the ocean after they had been found stowed away in a bunker by Chief Engineer Pierre Baex.

A year ago a similar haul, valued at $145,000, was tossed into the water.

No Rookies in Army; Slump Is Blamed

Washington, Nov. 29 (AP)—The rookie has disappeared from the ranks of the regular army. Even the youngest buck private in the service today is more or less an old-timer. The absence of the "raw recruit" is due chiefly to employment conditions which Maj.-Gen. Charles H. Bridges in his annual report says, has resulted in selecting only men who have seen previous service.

Progressives Will Yield to Democrats

Washington, Nov. 29 (AP)—Republican Progressives who supported Governor Roosevelt for President apparently are willing that the Democrats should have complete control of the Senate organization in the new Congress, including committee chairmanships.

This was indicated yesterday by Senator Norris of Nebraska, veteran Republican Independent, who announced he would relinquish his judiciary chairmanship to the Democratic majority after March 4.

WIFE, BRADLEY GAVE $1,500,000 TO, SUES HIM FOR 'SUPPORT'

Homes in Prides Crossing and Boston, but Aged Husband Lives in Hotel

A glimpse at the living expenses of Robert S. Bradley, millionaire executive of the American Agricultural Chemical Co., was given to Judge Dow in Salem probate court today at trial of the separate support suit of Mrs. Florence S. Bradley.

The Bradleys have homes at Pride's Crossing and in Boston, but he is now living at the Ambassador Hotel, New York City.

Frank W. Montgomery of Huron st., Swampscott, who testified he had been associated with Bradley for 32 years and his secretary 22 years, told the court that there were 20 rooms and 15 servants in the Pride's Crossing house.

The monthly cost for domestic servants for the two houses amounts to approximately $100, he said. He estimated Bradley's hotel expenses in New York at between $300 and $400 a month, including a chauffeur and a valet.

All this, and more, too, was brought out by counsel for Mrs. Bradley to substantiate her claim that her husband is not providing her with suitable support. Bradley is 77 and she is his third wife. They separated last August.

Montgomery testified that Bradley created a $1,500,000 trust fund for Mrs. Bradley in 1927, the year of their marriage, and her income from this was $45,000 in 1928; $40,000 in 1929; $31,000 in 1930; $47,000 last year, and $28,000 up to August of this year.

He estimated the total income this year will be $52,000 but he said Mrs. Bradley has not asked for any payments since the separation. He insisted the fund remains intact and that his employer has not given any instructions to cease the payments.

The witness then testified that Bradley's net income last year was "only $160,000, although three years ago it was $540,000."

Mrs. Whilhelmina Hoffman of Swampscott, daughter of the late Jacob Benz, Lynn leather merchant, filed an appearance in Salem probate court today, signalizing the beginning of an effort to break her father's will.

Science today is the criminal's most implacable foe. Miles from the scene of a crime, the State's best manhunters are gathered. And without leaving their office they go to work—by radio and teletype and phone. Here you see the search for the robbers of the North Brookfield bank being directed by Capt. Bligh of the State detectives, Commissioner of Safety Foote and Charles Beaupre, head of the State patrols. They are using State police map. Teletypes are rushing their orders all over Massachusetts and adjoining States. (Staff photo.)

This map graphicly pictures a modern man hunt. It shows how teletype, radio and automobile combined to capture the suspects in the North Brookfield bank robbery in less than an hour and a half! Now that science has entered the field, more than ever crime does not pay.

Asked Neither Kiss Nor Drink, She Swears

Mrs. Beatrice Mutty of Vinton st., Melrose, today hotly denied in Middlesex superior court that she asked Henry T. Keefe of Holland st., Somerville, to kiss her or to get her a drink.

Keefe, who is 33, is on trial charged with assault on Mrs. Mutty with a dangerous weapon while forcing her at pistol point to drive him in her car through Melrose, Somerville and Boston on the night of Nov. 3.

Q.—Who is this man you said drove to his home before you claim I got into your car?

Mrs. Muty turned to the judge and asked if she would have to tell the man's name. The court told her to do so and she said it was John Cohn, a neighbor.

Q.—Where is your husband? Is he in court? A.—No.

Q.—Didn't you ask me to kiss you while we were in the car? A.—No.

Q.—Didn't you ask me to get you a drink? A.—No.

Q.—Didn't we stop several times? A.—Yes.

Q.—Didn't we stop to buy gasoline which I paid for? A.—Yes.

Q.—Didn't we stop at a cafe in Canal st, where you had coffee? A.—Yes.

Asst. Dist. Atty. Andrew had Mrs. Mutty stae under cross-examination that she was so afraid she did everything Keefe directed and that he forced her to stop to get gasoline and refreshments.

Under direct examination, Mrs. Mutty said Keefe jumped into her car, pistol in hand, as soon as her neighbor left. The latter telephoned the police, who stopped the car in Somerville.

'Liberty Notes' for Cash Will Make Long Green Longer

Washington, Nov. 29 (AP)—Bills designed to end hard times are ready for introduction on the opening day of Congress, among them being a measure by Representative Rankin for expansion of the currency.

Reciting that the purchasing power of the dollar is 56 per cent above the average of the period from 1921 to 1929, the Mississippi Democrat calls for the issuance of non-interest bearing Treasury securities to be known as "Liberty Notes."

They would be used in a minimum amount equal to $4 per capita of the population of the country and would be used to pay the deficit and current expenses of the government until the general commodity index of the country rises to 100, it now being about 64.

Rankin said there was sufficient gold in the Treasury to enable the expansion without endangering the gold standard.

MENJOUS HEAR OLD WEDDING BELLS AGAIN

Couple Forgives and Forgets; Agrees the Rift Was a Terribe Mistake

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Hollywood, Cal., Nov. 29—Adolphe Menjou loves his pretty blonde wife, Kathryn Carver Menjou, and she loves him. Well, that is enough, isn't it, to make two people say, "I'm sorry. Let's forgive and forget."

Kathryn says she made many mistakes and she is willing to admit it. Adolphe says three-quarters of the mistakes were his and he has never loved anyone but Kathryn and if she is willing to take him back he is returning to the blessed state of matrimony.

Is Kathryn willing? She is more than willing. She was so happy today she was fairly breathless when she told me that she had been seeing Adolphe every evening and they had decided to try to make a go of marriage again.

"I know I have made a lot of mistakes," said Mrs. Menjou, "but I am going to be everything that Adolphe wants so we won't have any trouble in the future. He is the only man I have ever loved and now I can say how unhappy I was when I thought it was all over."

Sounds to me like a perfect symphony for when I talked to Adolphe he said:

"It's all my fault. Kathryn is a great girl and I was nervous. You know how it is when you go along for a while you get irritable and nothing seems right. Now I know I was trying to put the blame for what was really my fault on my wife. But perhaps it was just as well we had this break for now we understand each other."

So that's that. Each is willing to take the blame and I know the whole Hollywood film colony is delighted that these two are together again.

"We are going to have the greatest Christmas we have ever had," said Kathryn.

"That is true," repeated Adolphe. And here's wishing them a merry Christmas and hoping there will be no more matrimonial troubles.

Clara Big Girl Now; No More IT Stuff

New York, May 29—A big girl now and anxious to act her age, Clara Bow, the Brooklyn Bonfire, said upon her arrival from Hollywood yesterday that so far as she is concerned, the "It" stuff is out.

Red-headed Clara, whose fiery temperament and uncertain moods on and off the movie lots gave Will Hays and Jesse Lasky many a headache, has gone in for domesticity in a big way.

She thinks matrimony is grand, that her cowboy-husband, Rex Bell, is just perfect and that it would be very nice, indeed, if she—or they—could have babies—lots of babies.

"I think literature is just too swell," Clara remarked, grinding a cigarette beneath a slim French heel before she would pose for photographers. "There's nothing like a good book, unless it is a flock of good books."

Wearing a long dress of uncut velvet with puffed sleeves beneath her full length caracul coat, the movie actress, who is staging a screen come-back, announced that she was through with the sexy, rowdy roles that made her famous.

"I'm not going to show my legs any more," Clara said. "I'm going to be restrained. There's more to art than just legs, don't you think?"

"Now I'm going to behave myself. I'm a nice married girl. I want to have babies. I want to be a mother. I want to be a good wife. When I've made a few more pictures I'm going to quit."

Rex Bell will be here in a fortnight and he and Clara will go to Europe.

FAINT HALTS TORTURE STORY BY RUTSTEIN

torture inflicted on him while he was held captive.

Rutstein, holding up a rope introduced as an exhibit, was telling of the manner in which he had been lashed to a bed in the Nantasket cottage when Swartz suddenly half-stood in the prisoner' cage.

IN UTTER COLLAPSE

"Oh, I'm sick!" Swartz cried. His head sagged forward and fell into his hands as he collapsed. He was shaking all over.

Attorney Daniel J. Gallagher, his counsel, rushed to the cage where "Tough Portland Benny" was confined with two other defendants, and lifted Swartz's head. Tears were streaming down the culprit's cheeks, and he cried:

"Oh, Mr. Gallagher, I feel terrible! I'm sick."

Then he collapsed again and was removed to the detention room, while a recess was called. Dr. Edouard Sandoz, court physician, was summoned to treat him, but more than an hour later the man was still "out."

SEIZED BY HOODED MEN

Rutstein was well into his testimony when "Tough Portland Benny" collapsed. He had described how he was seized in the garage of his Dorchester home, blindfolded and gagged with adhesive tape and driven to Nantasket, where he was held captive by four men who wore black hoods.

His testimony as to the manner in which the kidnapers worked followed a like description given by Asst. Dist. Atty. Doyle in his opening statement to the jury, during which Doyle declared Rutstein had been tortured in an attempt to force $40,000 ransom from him.

Rutstein testified that he has lived in Brinsley st., Dorchester, for about four years and owns the house. He has known Swartz, he said, for about five years "as a friend" but never met any of the other defendants prior to the night of the kidnaping. Rutstein said:

"I drove my car into the garage in the rear of my house about 6:30 the night of October 11. Just as I was getting out of the car four or five fellows came up with guns.

"Schecter and Harmon stood in front of me. Addison remained at the wheel of the car they came in, facing the street. I looked at Schecter and Harmon and said, 'What's up'? Schecter said, 'Don't holler. Don't make any noise.'

"I said, 'What are you going to do, kill me?' He said, 'No.' Then someone grabbed me from behind by the throat. They threw me in the back of the sedan they came in. I said, 'Boys, what are you doing? Are you going to kill me?'

"JUST A KIDNAPING"

"Schecter said, 'This is just a kidnaping. You'll be home for supper. We want a little money. Keep quiet and everything'll be okey.'

"When I got in the car, they started to fish my pockets."

"They all did," said Rutstein. "When one got through, another would start. They said they expected more than they found. They took $26.

"We started out of the driveway and they said, 'You're talking too much; keep quiet.' They blindfolded me after putting adhesive tape on my mouth. They put the goggles on."

"WE WANT $40,000"

Q. (by Doyle)—What happened then?

"Well, I felt pretty blue. I couldn't understand what it was all about. I was lying on the floor of the car on my back. One of the boys had his foot on my chest to make sure I wouldn't get up.

"It was pretty tough. I couldn't talk. We rode for about three-quarters of an hour. Schecter kept talking, but I couldn't talk. He said, 'Don't worry; we won't harm you. We just want a little money.' Finally we stopped. I knew it was at a beach. I heard the waves. We went into a house. I felt it was a cottage. They sat me down.

"Someone with a Jewish dialect came over near me and began to talk. He said (in dialect) 'Well, you know we want $40,000.' I said, 'I haven't got $40,000,' and he said, 'Well, what's your brother's number? He's got it.' I said, 'I should say he hasn't.' He said, 'Well, he's got a good home.'

"I told them all I had in the world was $1400 and I had the bank book with me. I offered to give it all to them and to give me a break and let me out. I even offered to give them my house, all the property I owned, if they'd give me a break.

NO CHICKEN FEED.

"They said, 'That's chicken feed to us. We want $40,000.'

Q. (By Doyle)—Did they tie you up? A.—Yes, they put me on a cot and tied my hands and feet. I was still blindfolded. They offered me food but I said no. Then they said if I'd eat they'd take the blindfold off, so I said okey. I wanted to see the place.

"I said," continued Rutstein, "'What've you got to eat?' They said, 'Pork chops, ham and eggs, bacon and eggs.' I said, 'I'll take the pork chops.' They were terrible, so I just drank the coffee.

"They took off the blindfold and then I saw they all had black hoods on."

HOODS IN COURT

Rutstein identified one of the hoods produced by Doyle and placed as one of the exhibits against all the defendants except Swartz, who is declared not to have been in the cottage.

"After I had the coffee," Rutstein resumed, "they tied me to the bed. I said, 'The rope on my hands is tight. Can't you take that off and keep my feet tied? I couldn't get away with all you fellows.'"

He identified a rope produced by Doyle and it was entered as an exhibit.

The Rutstein stepped down from the witness stand and demonstrated with the rope just how his feet were tied. When he stepped back on the witness stand he continued his narrative, and said:

"I put in a miserable night that night."

At this point "Tough Portland Benny" collapsed and a recess was called.

Daniel J. Donovan of Mitchell st., Dorchester, Boston police photographer preceding Rutstein on the stand, identified 11 photographs he made of the Nantasket cottage.

Hans Johnson, janitor of an apartment block in Columbia rd., Dorchester, testified that Cohen, for three months, had a second-floor apartment in the block overlooking Brinsley st., in which Rutstein's home is located. Mrs. Cohen picked out the apartment, the janitor said.

SAW COHEN AT HOUSE

A Hull policeman, Percy A. Cram of Whitehead ave., Nantasket, testified that he has known Cohen seven or eight years and saw him on three afternoons during the week after Columbus Day, leaving the cottage at Nantasket.

Another Hull officer, James A. Melvin of Main st., Hull, declared on the stand that he knows Cohen to be a bootlegger and hijacker and saw him leave the cottage on Oct. 12.

The capture of Addison, Harmon and Schecter in the cottage, owned by Kate Murray, a sister of Cohen, was described by Patrolman Edward F. Glauson of Hull police.

He said that with Patrolmen Marshall and Kelly he entered the cottage with a pass key on Sunday, Oct. 16, and, with drawn revolvers, confronted Addison in one bedroom and Harmon in another. Glauson asked what they were doing in the cottage and they answered:

RESCUE OF RUTSTEIN

The officer said a gun was found in Harmon's bedroom and another in the kitchen. Glauson started upstairs and saw Schecter coming down with his hands in the air. Rutstein, clad only in his underwear, was descending in back of Schecter, the policeman said.

Witness said he slipped a loaded revolver out of Schecter's belt. Afterwards the officers found a cord in the attic beside a bed.

"Did you have to break down the door to get into the place?" asked Schester in cross-examination of the policeman. Schester and Harmon are without counsel during the trial.

"No," answered Glauson, "we had a pass key."

Q.—How did you find Rutstein? Was he tied or gagged? A.—Not that I could see.

Q. (By Harmon)—Was there a bed in the room where you saw me A.—I don't know.

Now That Silver Is Cheap, Why Use Real Money?

The question of whether an old colonial custom calling for the payment of water rental in silver bullion, or its equivalent in currency, shall be followed, was put up to Federal Judge Hugh D. McLellan today.

The issue was raised in a suit brought by the Holyoke Water Power Co., against the American Writing Paper Co., to recover $29,588.91 claimed due. It is being heard without a jury.

According to the plaintiff, agreements entered into in 1859 by predecessors of the writing paper company stipulated that water lessees should pay an annual rental of 250 ounces Troy weight silver bullion or in its equivalent in silver coin of the United States.

The plaintiff contends that at the time the equivalent of 260 ounces of silver was $300, and that later the custom was established of paying by check.

This custom the Holyoke Water Power Co. wants continued, but the defendant company insists on paying its 1931 bills and those due Jan. 30, 1932, by silver bullion or its equivalent.

Smokes Valued at $2605 Stolen

A truck, containing 51 large cartons of cigarettes, valued at $2605, stolen from a freight storage shed in the New Haven road yards, Northern ave., South Boston, was being sought by police today.

Police said the thieves backed their truck to the shed after the watchman passed it on his rounds last night, broke in and made away with the cartons. The cigarettes, packed in special Christmas wrappings for the holidays, were consigned to several Boston stores.

MEDFORD TRUST 'PLOT' BARED

Leon E. Merchant, a Boston broker, was a witness today in Middlesex superior court at the trial of four men charged with conspiracy to steal and to defraud the public by the sale of stock of the Medford Trust Company, now closed.

The defendants are Herbert, S. Mabey, Boston stock broker, Thomas F. Manning, Baxter ter., Roslindale; Henry R. Croshmere of Newton and Samuel Croshmere of Brighton.

Merchant testified that Mabey, with whom he had been affiliated in business, had instructed him to buy up all the Medford Trust stock available. Merchant said he bought the stock from June, 1930, until notice was served by the Public Utilities Commission.

He told of a talk he had with Mabey and Henry R. Croshmere as to his records relative to Medford Trust stock and testified that Henry Croshmere said to him, "Why don't you do away with the records?"

Merchant identified a circular dated Jan. 23, 1930, which bore the sentence: "Market value 250 shares Medford Trust $125."

Asst. Dist.-Atty. Frederick A. Crafts told the jury in his opening that Medford Trust stock was so well boomed by letter and radio that it was sold to the public from $125 to $130 a share when the actual market value was not greater than $80 to $85.

"Blind Pig" Picket Closes Place

Detroit, Nov. 29 (AP)—Police officers found themselves faced with a new situation today when they discovered two sandwich men walking back and forth in front of a Columbia st. address bearing signs which read: "Don't Patronize This Blind Pig."

Pressed for an explanation, the men said they were picketing the place in behalf of the Greater Detroit Chefs and Pastry Chefs Association.

"They're hiring non-union cooks in that joint," the men told the police.

Police said they were going to order the proprietor of the establishment to close up.

GUY LOMBARDO TAKES ADVANCE PEEP AT NEW DODGE SIX

New York, N. Y.—Guy Lombardo, personable leader of one of America's most famous dance orchestras, and musical idol of the younger set, deserted his baton today for an advance showing of the new Dodge Six.

"It's a hit!" was the enthusiastic comment of the rhythm king afterwards. And since Mr. Lombardo has been responsible for some of the biggest hits in the song world, his statement may be considered prophetic.

"The new Dodge Six will click with everybody who wants a smart, youthful car that is sporty and smooth. And it's so peppy! It has the zip and go of a snappy fox-trot, combined with the gliding ease of a dreamy waltz. It has everything the public wants—good looks, impressive power, flashing speed and brilliant performance. And when you add to that the amazing value represented by this great car you've got a combination that will take the country by storm."

Although details of the new car have not yet been officially released by the Dodge organization, rumor has it that Dodge is prepared to spring a real surprise when the car is formally presented. According to reports, the new Dodge Six will be offered with an astounding array of features, at a radical low price which is going to completely upset all established standards of value in the motor car world.

CHILD CAN'T BE 100 P. C. GOOD

If you want your children to be good, don't demand that they be perfect. This was the advice of Dr. Augusta Bonner, noted authority on child welfare, who spoke over Station WNAC today under the auspices of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

"When parents demand 100 per cent conduct from their children," Dr. Bonner said, "the children are apt to become discouraged when they find they cannot live up to such high standards."

Dr. Bonner emphasized the need of good example on the part of parents, pointing out that it is from them that children learn morals and manners.

Rutstein's Story Packs 'Em In -:- With an Army of Police on Guard

Part of the crowd that tried to wedge into the superior courtroom today to hear Herman Rutstein tell the dramatic story of his kidnaping and torture by a band of hooded men, who demanded $10,000 in ransom. The equally dramatic collapse of "Tough Benny" Swartz, one of the five men on trial, who fell writhing to the floor in the midst of Rutstein's recital, halted proceedings long before the crowd's craving for thrills had been satisfied.

NAB SUSPECTS IN HOUR

a. m., after Treasurer Brown had telephoned the alarm.

JANITOR TIED UP

The robbers had entered the bank through a window, apparently some time during the night. When Janitor McGuire appeared at 7:15, the bandits held him up with guns, bound him and threatened to take his life if he shouted for help. One robber wore a mask.

McGuire was tossed into the rest room, and the holdup men then waited until Treasurer Brown arrived at 8:10. In telling his story, he said:

"I had just entered the front door when a young man appeared and thrust a pistol in my side. 'You keep quiet,' he said. He was masked. Then two other men stepped forward and bound me with a clothesline. They carried me to the safe and told me to open it. My life was at stake so I opened the outer door.

"We'll wait for the time lock to open," one of the men said. They told me they had McGuire tied up in the rest room.

$200 IN CASH TAKEN

"They were pretty calm. They took me to the directors' room and tossed me into a chair. One stood guard with a revolver. When the time lock snapped open the vault the robbers entered it. Fortunately we had only $1200 in currency on hand. They took it all and then took my car keys. The men said they were taking my car, but would not drive it far."

Shortly after the alarm had been sent out State Trooper Joseph Doyle of the Brookfield barracks, returning from Worcester, saw three men changing from a Massachusetts sedan into a Connecticut car. He took the number and then called his barracks, to learn of the holdup. The number of the Connecticut car was then sent flashing out through the air and by teletype from the Holden barracks, to which it was relayed from Brookfield.

Meanwhile state troopers were covering all roads and all cruising cars, equipped with radio receiving sets, were operating on orders broadcast by short wave from Framingham.

At the State House, Commissioner of Public Safety Foote and Capt. Beaupre were issuing orders by teletype. In the meantime the Connecticut police had receivd the broadcast, and troopers from the Stafford Springs barracks stopped the car sought at 10:10.

FARMERS URGED TO RAISE GAME

New York, Nov. 29 (AP)—William Adams, director of the division of fish and game of the New York state conservation department, told the American game conference today that he did not think there would be enough game to satisfy hhunters in populous states until farmers and landowners were able to raise game as profitably as other crops.

Ernest E. Harwood told of Pennsylvania's success in using increased hunting and fishing license fees to buy abandoned farms and other land for public shooting grounds. He said that with the expenditure of about $1,180,000, Pennsylvania sportsmen have benefited by about $80,000,000 in the value of fish and game taken in these sanctuaries and by $25,000,000 in the value of fur-bearing animals trapped in the state.

KIDNAP TORTURE BARED

had been furnished with all information as to Rutstein's finances and other details of his life and habits by Swartz.

COVERED BY GUNS

"We will show that on the night of October 11 Rutstein drove into his garage and before he had a chance to turn the lights of his car off, he was confronted by six men. Three of them had guns.

"They pointed the guns at him and said, 'Quiet, this is a kidnaping. We want some money.' We will show that adhesive tape was placed over the mouth of Rutstein and a pair of goggles, the lens of which were covered with adhesive tape, placed over his eyes and that he was marched out into the driveway to a car which had followed him; that he was thrown on the floor of that machine and driven off.

"We will show that several of the defendants after taking money from his pockets, said, 'We thought you'd have a lot more money on you.'

TORTURED, THREATENED

"He was then driven to a cottage in Nantasket, it will be shown. Rutstein will tell you of the torture he went through there, how he was marched to the attic and there told by the defendants, 'We want $40,000. You were paid $80,000,' and that Rutstein replied, 'I haven't got $80,000. I've got a bank book with $1400. You can have that.'

"Then, we will show, the defendants replied, 'The monkey (that's Swartz, said Doyle) says you've got a lot more.'

"We will tell how Addison and Schecter dictated a ransom letter which Rutstein wrote, how it was eventually given to Addison, who took it to the Western Union office in Boylston st., how it was turned over to a clerk and then to a messenger and taken to Rutstein's brother's home in Newton.

"We will produce the ransom letter and all the witnesses concerned with it.

"KIDNAPERS HAVE COME"

"Rutstein will tell you how Schecter said to him, 'The bootleggers know the kidnapers are in town. When we get through with you, we're going to take Paradis.'"

Doyle interjected here: "Whoever he is."

"Schecter and Harmon," continued the prosecutor, "told Rutstein how they watched every move he made for days and nights preceding the kidnaping. "We will show that Cohen, several days previous to the crime, met Addison at Columbia rd. and Washington st. and that the man known as 'Chippie,' who has since disappeared, was there, and how 'Chippie' told them that the New York crowd was in town and going to work. We will show that Addison and Harmon several times went to the Cohen flat and that at 9 o'clock on the night of the kidnaping, after Rutstein had been delivered at Nantasket, Cohen and Addison were seen together in Nantasket.

HOW COHEN HID OUT

"We will show that Cohen was seen going in and out of the cottage and we will show how, when the police broke in, they found Rutstein, Schecter, Harmon and Addison there—and police found guns in the cottage.

"We will show that after they were arrested, two men known as 'Jack' and 'Benny,' from New York, met Cohen in a Cambridge restaurant and that Cohen later went to the Colonial Hotel in the Back Bay and registered under an assumed name.

"On the Sunday after the arrest, it will be shown, Cohen met Swartz and 'Chippie' in the Back Bay and they discussed plans for gettings 'Bugs' M[illegible]rs in New York to put a 'wire' into Boston to get the whole thing straightened out, and advised Cohen in the meantime to stay in hiding; that Cohen then went to a house in Walpole, where he remained in hiding until captured by police."

$37,500 Love Verdict Cut to $20,000

Providence, R. I., Nov. 29—The low cost of living or something else apparently caused Judge Joslin in Superior Court to cut to $20,000 the verdict of $37,500 awarded Miss Anne Munroe, 57, in her heart balm suit against Paul Lavimodiere, wealthy Woonsocket lumberman.

The original verdict, returned by a jury June 4 last, was the largest amount ever awarded in the state in a breach of promise case.

It followed trial of Miss Munroe's suit, in which she charged the 61-yar-old Lavimodiere had jilted her twice. The first time was 29 years previously, when Miss Munroe started to teach him English on his arrival from Canada, she said. The first setence was "I love you," he testified, in denying the charge. Miss Munroe testified that after his wife died Lavimodiere again proposed marriage to her.

Who's Middle-Class? Who'll Admit It in America?

By GILBERT SELDES

One of the most successful of recent French publications is a magazine called "Vu," which should, I suppose, be translated Seen; it is a pictorial, and probably it is popular because the French newspapers haven't developed illustration to the ponit we have. Last summer "Vu" got out a number devoted to "the good old days" which made half of Paris homesick for the 1900's and contained a picture of a singularly attractive dancer named Lady Gresha MacLead, who had come from Java to exhibit the religious dances of that country; she was later known as Mata Hari. Another number was Vu in Vienna, devoted in large part to Dr. Freud.

Gilbert Seldes

A third, most impressive of the lot, was dedicated to the good, sound, simple French citizen, Mr. Common Sense, the sum and perfection of all French virtues, the man who raises the crops and keeps the little shoe store and pays for the war and in short, is France. It glorified the silent, inexpressive middle-class, with several sneers, on the side, at the superior people and the Communists.

This interested me because I began to wonder at once what would happen if the editors of an American magazine wanted to issue a similar number. To whom would they dedicate it? What attitude would they take toward their subject? How could they rid themselves and their writers and their illustrators of the half-jocose, half-contemptuous attitude toward the little man which has been obligatory among us for 15 years? And what would the reception of the issue be like?

I am not interested in what the intellectuals or the wealthy would think of it; only in what the hero of the magazine would think. The middle-class Frenchman, I was given to understand, was as pleased and flattered as an actress with her picture on page one, yes, he said to himself, this is me, the backbone of the nation, the summary of its best qualities—me, I'm John Frenchman. What American would say that?

If you chose a little storekeeper, he would be annoyed because you implied he wasn't as rich and as "good" as the head of a chain of shops—which is exactly what he intends to be in 10 years. If you chose a small farmer, he would remark with some cynicism that if he is the backbone of America, America had better send for an osteopath or a surgeon.

Is our typical man a Gloucester fisherman or an Oregon salmon canner or a bus-driver in Chicago or a peach grower in Georgia? We know about the average income (at least we know that it is insufficient) and what it is spent on; but actually we do not know what the average man does and thinks, because, it appears, our average has such a bad habit of varying.

For generations we have been told to rejoice that we have no classes in America. It isn't precisely true; but it is true in one unfortunate way. The classes are so shifting and variable that we have no solid bulk of a middle class. It is the middle class which defines character and gives you something you can count on. It may be dull, but it is solid; and what we have is still volatile and explosive. If we have a forgotten man, it is only because we never knew him well enough to get his features in our memories. He changed right before our eyes.

I like to see good dancing and, since dancers are suffering and are getting up a vast benefit (in the Mecca Temple in New York, in December) I am glad they have an enterprising press agent. From him I hear that "the only salvation for the world today is that everyone must dance" (says Ruth St. Denis) and "Traffic Cops will have to learn how to dance and give their orders to vehicles in the modern dance technique" (says Belle Didjah) and, best of all, "the reason Hoover lost the election was because he never was a dancer" (says Maria Gambarelli).

Miss St. Denis thinks that for the duration of the emergency "the President, the governors, the mayors, the leaders of great business institutions, religious leaders must all change the staid cold methods of walking and introduce the dance idea." Not fantasy, you understand, but masculine grace, courage, and good gestures.

I don't think the girls will make it. Until a nation-wide demand for this sort of thing rises, most people, observing the newsreels, will think it is all a publicity stunt. And, having seen the news-reels through the campaign, we would just as soon have a little less of that.

DUBOIS LEAVES ONLY SMALL ESTATE

Instead of being wealthy as reported, Charles E. DuBois of Tuckahoe, N. Y., jeweler, who committed suicide after his wife was found slain and buried in the cellar of her Plymouth summer home last September, left a modest estate.

An inventory filed today in Norfolk County Probate Court at Dedham by Attorney Ralph W. Trout, appraiser, set the value of the DuBois estate at $1442.06. It consisted of personal property, cash, jewelry and an automobile.

His home in Tuckahoe, N. Y., valued at $11,950, had two mortgages, which equalled its valuation. The property in Plymouth and Braintree, which DuBois deeded to Miss Grace Atwood, daughter of a Middleboro box manufacturer, was listed in his wife's name, and was not mentioned in the inventory.

Yesterday DuBois' aged mother began court action to recover the two deeded pieces of property. Miss Atwood, however, said she would not contest the action, declaring she wanted no part of the property of her one-time sweetheart.

Here's Your Chance to Make Someone Happy Christmas

To Applicants for Christmas Baskets

In order that Christmas baskets go only to deserving and needy families, it is necessary that each application be approved by either your priest, or minister, or school teacher, or mail carrier and nearby storekeeper, or police officer, or social worker, or church or charity group. If you wish to apply for a basket, therefore, get an O. K. from any one of these persons. Do not come to the Evening American office, as it is impossible to personally confer with the many thousands of applicants. Be sure to give the number in the family.

School teachers, priests, ministers, police officers, mail carriers and church and charity groups are urged to send in their lists of deserving applicants as quickly as possible. A vast amount of work is necessary to list and check applicants against duplication, and a charitable deed done quickly is twice blessed. An especial effort to reach needy families not receiving city aid is requested.

Address all names and lists, as well as contributions, to the Christmas Basket Fund, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop sq.

Perhaps, some day, it won't be necessary. It won't be necessary for that Dorchester widow to ask for a little extra food, "just for Christmas Day," that her five little ones may have their first full meal in months.

Some day, perhaps, that Somerville mother, whose husband is in prison, may not have to appeal in God's name for her half-clothed, half-starved babies.

And that brave little fellow from South Boston, whose childish scrawl pleads not for himself, but for his mother, who goes hungry herself, that her children may eat, may be able to provide for her.

The Boston Evening American has already received hundreds of requests for Christmas baskets. Last year your generosity provided more than 25,000 persons with turkey and all the fixins'—giving them one touch of Christmas joy to offset all their grief and sorrow of the year.

Last year, in several thousand homes, the spark of hope was rekindled in the souls of the hungry, the unfortunate. Not that a single real meal means happiness for a year, although to many, a full meal is like manna from heaven.

But picture the joy that comes to a mother's heart on seeing her children happy the one day of the year when the whole world rejoices! Picture the new courage that fills a father's heart when he sees his loved ones, for whom he cannot provide through no fault of his own, smile once more.

It gives him the strength to carry on.

MEANS MORE NOW

Goodfellows, your Christmas basket will mean more this year than ever before. Many are seeking your help for the first time. Others you have helped before look to you once again.

As in the past, the Boston Evening American will act as your agent bearing all the expense of investigation and distribution.

If you prefer to personally help needy families, you may get in touch with the Christmas basket editor who will furnish you with the names of needy ones.

HOW TO GET AID

If you choose to help otherwise, send in your contribution. No matter how small it may be, your donation may be the one to make some hungry youngster happy.

Send in your contribution today to the Christmas Basket Editor, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop sq., Boston.

Make someone else happy that your own Christmas may be happier.

Those who apply for Christmas baskets must have their letters approved or their applications will not be considered. Each application must be endorsed by one of the following persons or groups:

1—A priest or a minister.

2—A school teacher of the child of an applicant.

3—The postman on the applicant's route AND a storekeeper.

5—By a social worker, or by a church or charity group.

Applicants MUST NOT call at the office of the Boston Evening American. All requests MUST BE MAILED to the Christmas Basket Editor, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop sq., Boston.

Ships Report Sea of Dead Locusts

Porto Alegre, Brazil, Nov. 29 (AP)—A "Sargasso Sea" of dead locusts was reported by crews of incoming vessels as having been sighted in the Atlantic Ocean about 50 miles off the Rio Grande Do Sul coast.

The insects were reported to cover the water for several miles, giving an appearance similar to that of the Sargasso Sea which is formed in the North Atlantic by accumulation of gulf weed. It was believed the locusts were carried out to set by a high wind

Takes Own Life

Winslow, Nov. 29 (AP)—Edward L. Brann, 51, shot himself to death in his home here. He had been in ill health for some time.

Call Oversubscribed

Washington, Nov. 29 (AP)—Secretary Mills announced that applications totaling $302,630,000 were received for the offering of $100,000,000 of 91-day treasury bills maturing March 1, 1933.

BODY by FISHER

Every Body by Fisher bears this emblem to the right and immediately below the right front door. Look for this emblem of Body by Fisher before you accept any motor car body.

Now every occupant of a car can regulate the ventilation exactly to suit himself!

The Fisher Body Corporation has perfected a scientific new ventilation system for closed cars which forever ends the discomfort of drafts.

Fresh air is deflected into the body by the car's motion, and circulated throughout the body, without any draft. Through this circulation used air and smoke are instantly carried outside. What is more, this new Fisher system prevents the dangerous clouding of windows and windshield in stormy weather.

This new Fisher ventilation system is the most important contribution to closed car comfort and safety since the introduction of the closed body itself. Don't fail to see and try it on the new General Motors cars—the only cars with Body by Fisher.

Before you buy any car be sure to see how much Fisher and General Motors have increased values for 1933.

DO YOU KNOW . . . That Mrs. Philip Stockton is having a hand-picked dinner party before the first Friday Evening at the Hotel Somerset? The guests will gather at the Stockton residence, 342 Beacon st., where sub-deb daughter, Margaret, will greet them and act as hostess . . . later drifting on to the Somerset where the first of these popular young people's dances will be held on December 2.

Times are changing indeed . . . for years it has been the custom for the matrons to give their dinners before these dances at the Chilton Club . . . We see a tendency toward small informal groups breaking off from the gigantic thing which is now labeled SOCIETY and we may again see a "400" spring up which will have no affiliation with the Junior League or Vincent Club.

Guest of Dorothy Dillon

EVELYN HOLLINGSWORTH, daughter of Mrs. Amor Hollingsworth of Milton, is visiting Dorothy Dillon in New York. Miss Dillon is the daughter of the C. Douglas Dillons, whose son, C. D., Jr., married Phyllis Ellsworth. Miss Hollingsworth and Miss Dillon were summer pals at Isleboro.

Tables are selling like hot cakes for the contract bridge afternoon at the home of Mrs. Frank W. Paine on Hammond st., Chestnut Hill. Some charity connected with Trinity Church will benefit, we believe.

Mrs. William Ames of North Easton gave a luncheon party a short time ago at which a very promising colored singer was the artist. After Mrs. Ames' guests had finished their delicious lunch the coffee was brought in by a colored "mammy" dressed in picturesque costume of brown full skirt, orange shawl and large white apron. You may imagine their surprise when this colorful person burst into a Negro spiritual . . . the applause was spontaneous and genuine. Mrs. T. Handysyd Cabot was among Mrs. Ames' guests.

Guests at Providence Debut

Received a sweet message from Claudio Muzio, who is singing at the Diaz afternoons at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York . . . she was a vision in boufant gold lace with red poppies here and there, later wearing a superb Tosca costume and in the finale appeared in a smart afternoon gown of ecru lace and cape with sable touches.

They do things differently in New York . . . Grace Moore, who opened the Du Barry in New York last week changes her beautiful costumes in a dressing room done in rose toile de Jouy, the exact period of the time of the Du Barry. In Boston, the artists have to imagine their toile de Jouys in the bare little cubby-holes which they call the star's dressing room.

A Gay Little Party at Club

SAW A PARTY OF YOUNG people at Little Madrid on Saturday night who had tripped the light fantastic earlier at the first Eliot Hall dance in Jamaica Plain. Mr. Horace White of Seattle, Wash., was with a large party which included Nancy Overton, who is studying aero-dynamics at M. I. T., and Polly Pickering, who is a student at Radcliffe.

We arrived at this delightful little supper club EARLY, around 11 p. m., so that we might have a few dances with the E. N. O. before the floor got too crowded . . . we being of the old school who glide and slide, heel, toe and a one-two-three and really get up an appetite for our lobster thermidor.

Billy, the accordian player, made life romantic for us as we dreamed in the softly lighted dusk gazing at a painting which the E. N. O. says is very like the coast of Madrid. All of the young crowd gathered around Meryl Goodhue's orchestra and sang college songs in the wee sma' hours . . . it was very informal and CONGENIAL, as a supper club should be.

Books---And a Number of Things

By CHARLES HANSON TOWNE

The really important series of books which Mark Sullivan has been giving us under the general title of "Our Times" (Scribner's) will prove of inestimable value to future historians of these United States.

The fourth volume covers the period between 1909 and 1914—that golden age before the World War, which most of us dreamily thought would go on forever. There was plenty of excitement in this country; it was a time of vast energy and political strife. Perhaps the high spot of the era was the open break between Theodore Roosevelt and President Taft.

* * *

In view of the recent recriminations of presidential candidates, it is interesting to remember, as Mr. Sullivan reminds us, that for 18 months after the famous split between these two erstwhile friends, no word of blame was uttered on either side. True, in private each had said rather bitter things. Roosevelt had told a friend that he had never realized at the time how much of himself he had put into Taft; and he had written to Lodge, in a burst of confidence: "The qualities shown by a thoroughly able and trustworthy lieutenant are totally different from those needed by the leader."

Taft, on his side, had said to his aide, Archie Butt, "I am greatly distressed. Roosevelt sees no one but my enemies, and if by chance he sees any supporters of the administration, he does not talk intimately with them . . . I confess it wounds me very deeply. I hardly think Roosevelt is playing square with me."

Then, on the morning of October 27, 1913, Roosevelt read in the newspapers an item that to millions of Americans had only casual interest—an announcement that Taft, through his Attorney-General, had the day before begun a dissolution suit against the United States Steel Corporation, charging among other counts that the Steel Corporation was a monopoly, that it had achieved its monopoly in part by purchasing the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company four years before, and that, in acquiring the Tennessee Company, the Steel Corporation had misled Theodore Roosevelt, who had been President at the time.

"To Roosevelt," Mr. Sullivan writes, "the announcement was infuriating. Hundreds of friends of Roosevelt and of Taft have made surmises about the cause of the split between them, scores of historians have searched to find it, thousands of newspaper articles have assigned one cause or another, millions of the curious have wondered. The Steel Corporation suit was it. To be sure, there was, as in all such cases, no one cause; it was a growth. But so far as one episode detonated the antagonism into flame, so far as there was any 'the cause,' the Steel Corporation suit was the climax."

* * *

Read the rest of this absorbing story of the breach which widened. And then have a fascinating time playing a game with your memory. Is it possible, you will say to yourself, that it was not until 1914 that Henry Ford emerged as a great figure? And think of the people in other walks of life who were celebrated at this period. Many of their names are still familiar to you. A baseball player named Napoleon Lajoie was a public character before Henry Ford came along, raising wages in his Detroit factories. An actor named Douglas Fairbanks was also well known; so was a magician named Houdini; a moving picture actress named Mary Pickford.

"Pitiless publicity" was another phrase much in vogue. It was Woodrow Wilson who thought that this would cure many of the ills of government.

* * *

Such an invention as the self-starter, which we all take for granted now, did not appear until 1912. In that year, too, China became a Republic, the Rosenthal murder occurred, and an assassin attempted to kill Roosevelt at Milwaukee.

See what books came out in 1912. Fiction, with a few exceptions, was commonplace; but there was something like a renaissance in poetry. Burton Stevenson, after having essayed for 12 years every kind of writing including mystery stories, brought out "The Home Book of Verse," one of the best anthologies we have. Dreiser published "The Financier," but it was not on any of the best-seller lists.

The photographs are of exceptional interest, as in the previous volumes. Mr. Sullivan deserves our everlasting gratitude for his tireless research. He should be crowned and anointed.

THREE WOMEN :-: By Faith Baldwin

Elopement Is Stopped by Mother

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Mrs. Liuisa Lennox Sheldon . . . first of the THREE WOMEN, a wealthy New York widow . . . idolizes her son, Lennox, just graduated from Columbia. She planned two years in advance to marry him to some healthy, well-bred, not clever, and docile girl after she found mute evidence on his dress clothes that he had ben at a studio party which included what she considered "improper female companions." She arranged for Elizabeth Howland, daughter of her sister-in-law, to come to New York city and become Mrs. Sheldon's companion. At first Lennox did not take to Elizabeth, but, after many months, he began to realize that the quiet, studious girl was of his own poetry-loving type and, returning from a European tour, he suddenly tells her he loves her. Thte engagement is announced. Elizabeth goes to see her mother in Bonston. Lnnox visits her there.

NOW READ ON

The weeks slipped by. Lennox went about his day's work dutifully accompanied his mother in his free time, sat at home with her, paid calls, and did not come alive until Friday. Every Friday, when he stepped on the train his real self returned to him, he walked through the plush and varnish atmosphere of the cars as a conqueror walks.

Then there came days when Elizabeth started when spoken to, burst into tears when teased, crept away by herself to sit in dim corners, her chin in her hand, and spent hours writing letters which she tore up. Lennox wrote every day, wired twice, and coming home at night looked eagerly toward the hall table on which no letter lay. His mother questioned him.

"You have not heard from Elizabeth?"

"Not this week—she must be ill."

"Ella wrote me that she had Alice down with a touch of influenza the day you came home," said Mrs. Sheldon.

He was not listening. He was prowling about the room. Something was wrong. What was it?

ELIZABETH TELLS HIM

Elizabeth told him, the night he arrived, after her mother and sisters had gone upstairs. She sat beside him on an old ramshackle couch, and her small cold hand was fast in his.

"Dearest—and you worried so! God, what a beast I am!" he cried out, clutching the hand until her flesh winced in pain.

"No—don't—all worth it——" she told him. "I—didn't write. I couldn't bear to bother you.

"June?" he asked heavily.

They looked at one another. June was so far away.

Suddenly he pulled her to him, kissed her.

"Here?"

"Well, no. Could you come to New York? Next week? I'll meet you—we'll slip away. Tell them we didn't want the fuss and nonsense of a big wedding."

"Lennox, Lennox, I've worried you dreadfully!"

"Sweet," he said. "And fretting because you might 'bother' me—when it's all been my fault. But I loved you so," he said.

They made their plans. To make sure, when he reached home he would send her a little memorandum with time and places on it.

EASY TO SLIP OUT

It was easy to slip out while her mother was marketing, to leave a note, to know the girls were safely out of the way, to pack a little bag. But harder to buy the ticket with the money Lennox had given her, to get into the train and sit there, quietly, watching the country slide by not wondering much beyond the eventual safety of his arms, not thinking of other people, especially not thinking of Cousin Louisa.

It was not chance that brought Louisa Sheldon to the station that day. It was a page from a note book, fallen from Lennox's pocket. The little sober routine he had made out for Elizabeth's guidance, lest she go astray, and had not sent, the second draft seeming clearer. It was not a letter, you understand, just a memorandum. Louisa didn't read other people's letters.

It fell into her hands on the morning Elizabeth was sitting on the train.

Louisa met the train.

Elizabeth, getting out of the car, saw Lennox first. He was hurrying toward her, he had seen no one else. His eyes were alight with relief, with happiness, with, now that the step was taken, adventure.

She smiled and moved toward him. She looked beyond him and her eyes went wide and blank. Lennox turned.

WENT LIKE CHILDREN

His mother moved up beside him, stood there.

"The coupe is outside," she merely said.

Then, into the library with them and the door closed.

"What is the meaning of this?"

"We were going to be married."

She looked almost imbecile for a moment. Then her face hardened.

"But you are to be married—in June."

There was a silence. Elizabeth got up from the chair in which she had been sitting limply and came forward. She flung back her head and controlled her lips. She said, clearly, "June will be too late."

Another silence. It hurt like hammer blows. It sharpened, took on the quality of an insane screaming. Lennox made a motion toward his mother.

"My fault—I—— Don't look like that, Mother. We—we love each other."

Louisa fought against an actual nausea. She turned her eyes from his eyes, she looked, brutally, comprehendingly at the girl.

"I understand," she said, and did not know that understanding had been denied her.

ROOTED TO CARPET

But Elizabeth stood as if rooted to the carpet. Words struggled in her little throat, beat there like wings—Oh, you don't understand, you can't, you hateful, tall woman. We love each other—we wanted each other—and it was beautiful, I tell you, unendurably beautiful—and now it's spoiled. You've spoiled it, with your hard eyes and your bitter mouth and your voice . . .

She could not say any of it, not one word—she struck her hands together—the room swung, the room darkened—she thrust her arms stiffly ahead of her, spoke her lover's name in a small voice—and fell deep, deep into the burning darkness.

"She's fainted," he said, savagely.

"Yes. No, Lennox, put her flat—her head lower. She will be all right in a moment. It's only natural, under the circumstances," said Louisa.

"Well?" Lennox demanded.

She loved him, he was her enemy. No, her enemy lay there, unconscious, escaped from her. She answered, unhurried.

"I have no comment to make. Why shuold I? The marriage must be hastened. I will tell people I am going abroad. The wedding will take place at once. I suppose word was left with Ella?"

NO COMMENT

"Just that Elizabeth had heard from me and was coming to New York to be married quietly."

"Ella is a fool," remarked his mother. Her tone added—and the mother of fools. She looked briefly toward the girl who stirred now, moaned a little, tried to sit up. Louisa watched Lennox go to her, raise her in his arms. She heard his voice, his broken words of comfort. She stood very erect, holding herself so. She thought, strangely—if I open my hands, if I let go—I shall die—go out. Like a candle. No, fall like a tree, by the axe.

"I will wire Ella. It can be arranged. You will be married next week, just as we had planned. There must be no scandal, do you understand me?"

She had walked over to the couch and was standing over them. Now she spoke directly to the girl.

"You and Lennox will be married next week, in church—all as we had arranged—the reception here. I shall sail the following day. You may stay here or go away as you please. It makes no difference to me. I have lost interest."

Elizabeth spoke faintly, "Church? A reception? No, no! Cousin Louisa, don't look at me so—I couldn't——"

"You must. You will do as I say. I protect my house," said Louisa, "and my son's child. Not you. With you I have no concern."

"Mother!"

"Be silent!"

She left the room, without haste.

Elizabeth turned her face against her lover's arm. The sobs which wrung her went through him.

"Don't—ah—don't—what does it matter? She—we could have expected just that. She can't understand, dearest. Don't cry so. See, we'll be married next week—and together for always. No she shan't hurt you, I swear it.

SHE WIRED ELLA

Louisa went on up to her room. She wrote out her wire to Ella, and the letter that was to follow. Very light, her touch on the pen—such silly, romantic young people—their addled heads filled with the venturesome idea of elopement. Too much novel reading, she supposed. But she'd known, Lennox couldn't concoct anything from her. The wedding would take place next week. She named the date. Ella and the girls must come on, there would be the final trousseau to buy, all the things to arrange, caterer, church.

That much was done. Now she must consider the newspapers and the invitations. The latter must go by hand, there would be no time for Tiffany; and the list must be cut down.

In the morning she would telephone to the Sheldon office to let her have a secretary.

Now, there was time to make an appointment with the Rev. Dr. Martin, with the caterer and florist.

Style of Evening Gowns Is Changing

PARIS, Nov. 29—The Paris evening gown continues to do a quick-change act. Not only do evening frocks sport little jackets and coats that make them over into dinner dresses and semi-tailored suits, but the style of the dresses themselves is changing. There is a tendency to make skirts of formal evening dresses either definitely long or definitely short, to make sleeves—when there are any—come nearer the elbow than the shoulder, and to cut necklines higher, both in front and in the back.

Many of the newest evening dresses have no decolletage at all at the back, and only a very slight one at the front. Many of them have sleeves which are really sleeves and not just continuations of shoulder straps. Many have skirts that not only touch the floor but trail behind. One designer reports that many of his clients order little trains added to dresses that were designed with even hems.

Both evening gowns sketched today have dripping floor-length skirts of marked fullness. Both—in spite of modified necklines—are dresses in the grander manner and are not meant for extremely young women. Both make much use of draping about the natural waistline, with a tendency toward a lowered line by means of bows and loops of the dress fabric.

Oh Yeah? Just Tell It to the Wife

Chicago, Nov. 29 (AP)—Joseph D. Vehling, editor of "The Nation's Chefs" and active in the Second National Culinary Art Salon, held this week by the Chefs' Cuisine Association, says America doesn't know nor appreciate good cooking as a fine art.

"America sits down to a meal that really taxes the cook's skill on the average of three or four times a year — Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's and special celebration," he said.

The rest of the time, he added, it is merely a process of three meals a day.

Panama Canal Is Closed by Floods

Balboa, Canal Zone, Nov. 29 (AP)—The Panama Canal was closed to traffic early today as 13 of the Gatun dam spillway gates stood open to pass a torrent of flood water from the Chagres River.

Officials said a crest had been reached at 4 p. m. yesterday, but there was a possibility of a greater rise, because storm conditions on the Atlantic side were continuing.

Victim of Hunting Accident Is Dead

Burlington, Vt., Nov. 29 (AP)—Ford Casey, 21, of Bristol, died in a hospital here today from bullet wounds received in a hunting accident yesterday. Casey and his father were climbing down a cliff while hunting deer near Bristol. The young man stumbled, and the gun discharged, the bullet entering his side. His father carried him on his back for several miles to the nearest house.

Women Praise the Modern Man in His Attitude Toward Them

By MARGUERITE MOOERS MARSHALL

THREE ROUSING CHEERS for the Modern MAN—yes, this time, "MAN" is what we said, not "WOMAN." The reason for our present outburst of applause is entitled Capt. J. A. Mollison.

For while the England-to-the-Cape flight of Amy Johnson, otherwise Mrs. Mollison, was a splendid and spectacular achievement, it sems to us that something just as splendid and, in its own way, as difficult, was achieved in the gallant captain's frank enthusiasm over the fact that his wife had beaten his own record for the same flight by ten and one-half hours.

There is the truly modern man for you—the man who lives mentally and emotionally, not just chronologically, in the year 1932. For it's only a modern man of this sort who has "let the ape and tiger die" in himself so completely that he can look, without primitive hate or hurt—indeed, with actual jubilance—upon the spectacle of the woman he married beating him at his own game.

His Own Words

He not only takes it—he likes it! If ever there were a better sport, a more gallant and civilized mate, history contains no record of him!

Remember what Capt. Mollison said when he learned that his Amy had so marvelously triumphed over his own triumphal flight of but six months ago. There are his words:

"I am very proud of her. I was beaten in a fair flight and I am very glad. It's wonderful and a great triumph.

"I knew all the time Amy would do it. It will prove without doubt that she is the finest airwoman in the world. Flying with practically no rest over foreign countries, sometimes in very bad weather, she has created a record which it will require a superman to beat. I am at the moment the proudest husband in the world."

Now this masculine attitude is not only generous and fine and sporting—it's NEW. How such a modern reaction differs from the viewpoint of yesteryear's lord and master is strikingly illustrated in Mary Austin's important new autobiography, "Earth Horizon."

This truly remarkable story of a veteran woman novelist, dramatist, philosopher and poet shows the antagonism of the American husband, even as recently as 30 years ago, to a personal career for the woman he married.

He made all the plans. She made the sacrifices and adjustments. His attitude can be summed up in that traditional assertion of the domestic sultan:

"I'm the One!"

"Man and wife are one and I'M the one!"

Repeatedly Mrs. Austin stresses this attitude, not only in her own husband, but in men whom she might have married and in the husbands of her contemporaries. And she herself points the contrast between then and now, when she writes of these husbands:

"They could not come even half-way, as men of a younger generation have done . . . The young have no recollection of the weight of traditional pattern on the structure of married life; the pattern of male dominance and feminine subservience."

'THE COLD BLAST'

Drawn by Nell Brinkley

THANKS TO MARY!

THIS PICTURE is made, with many thanks, around the idea of "Mary." She sent it along, modestly, in pity for the harrassed artist, but she would sign nothing but Mary, because the idea was a sample thing, and it was offered timidly.

November, a lovely lady with amber eyes and locks, her shoulders shivering bare, like the naked Northern world, but for the rustling, few and ragged leaves and late asters and tattered chrysanthemums that she goes dressed in, is driven before the icy breath of Winter. Winter is an ancient, blustering creature, all white beard and browe and hair, frosted and rimmed with the crystals of the East wind, and he blows as hard and boisterously as he can on the shivering lady-season who flees before him.

Mary quotes:

"The vines remembering Summer, shiver
In frosty winds, and gain
A fuller life from mere endeavor
To live through all that pain."

She says November seems to die before the bitter breath of Winter, but she does not, only disappears to mortal eyes, to come back again in the guise of Spring, as the vines do. And as humans seem to die and fade in the struggle against cold sorrow, but do not. They rise again into new flowering, deeper colored and hardier, after the "Winter of their discontent."

—NELL BRINKLEY.

Miss Fairfax Warns of the Timid Boy

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Some time ago I read a letter from a girl in your column, and her problem might have been my own. A young man came to see her for a couple of years but never alone. Always a boy chum, his sister or some one else came, too. Her parents told her to drop him, which she did. My timid soul was a fellow student in some university extension work, which we had both taken up after business hours. A group of us used to have little parties, then, when we became mutually attracted, used to ask him without the others. But always he came with some friend or enemy in the capacity of watch dog. Finally I gave him the sack, like the other girl. Why was he afraid, do you suppose?

MOLLIE B.

Dear Mollie B.: All said and done, the attitude of these timid souls who are afraid to call on a girl without a watch dog is immensely flattering. They don't want to commit themselves, and they take this third-party precaution not to run any chances. The depression may be at the bottom of this excessive prudence; but whatever is the cause, a threesome isn't much fun as a steady diet. If your intentions were serious, you did the right thing, as his evidently were not.

A Leisurely Affair

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am 23 and for four years have been going with a man a little older than I am. I'm very much in love with him. He has never asked me to marry him. We go out at least twice a week and have never had a quarrel. He doesn't care if I go out with other men, but maybe it is because he hasn't very much money to spend on me. He says he wants me to have a good time. To my knowledge, he doesn't go out with anyone else. Will you try and help me figure him out? ANXIOUS.

Dear Anxious: With a stalling cavalier, such as you describe this man to be, you've got to put a straight question to yourself, "Is the friendship this man gives me enough to fill my life? Will it be enough, granting that I never marry?" Because, my dear, when a man has gone with a girl for four years and never said what the Irish call the "good hard word," delightful though he may be, he belongs to the type known as "time-wasters." If he can't afford to marry, he should tell you quite frankly that he enjoys your society, but marriage is out of the question for him. But it's not fair to a girl to drift along year after year, till youth and opportunity have fled, and then tell her that—as so many of these leisurely cavaliers have done.

Gray Hair

Best Remedy Is Made At Home

To half a pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair and makes it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Your Health

Preventive Steps Pay Rich Dividends

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

Dr. Copeland

IN A RECENT newspaper interview, Dr. Charles W. Mayo stated that protection against human ailments has developed so that there is little excuse for the continued existence of some diseases. This eminent surgeon believes that within the next 50 years the development of preventive methods will materially aid in the progress medical science has made in the past half century. Certainly we are foolish to disregard the benefits of health information.

Within recent years one of the most important advances has been the development of that branch of medicine known as "Preventive Medicine." Preventive medicine encourages the periodic health examination. This should be made at regular intervals, regardless of whether it is believed disease is present or absent.

The object of these examinations is to discover disease in its early stage. At this period most ailments are painless and give no warning of their existence. It is important to get the truth because a disease that is discovered early can usually be cured quickly.

Many serious chronic diseases develop slowly, causing little disturbance to the body health. When neglected and allowed to run their course, it is often difficult to give permanent relief. Detection can be made by careful periodic health examinations. In this way cancer is frequently found. Cancer recognized at an early stage is usually, if not always, curable.

Preventive medicine increases the life span and prevents the occurrence of many constitutional diseases. Epidemics which in former years destroyed huge armies are rarely heard of in these times. There are still many diseases that can be and should be prevented. I refer to those infectious diseases, diphtheria, scarlet fever, typhoid fever and smallpox. They are preventable by modern methods of immunization.

The Daily True Story

Exploring Love

NO AMOUNT of talk on the part of her devoted friends could persuade Mrs. Joyce Duncan of the utter foolishness of her intentions.

"For once in my life," exclaimed Joyce as the blonde waves of her hair shimmered, "I'm going to act as my heart dictates."

It was an unacknowledged secret in her social set that Joyce had not contracted her first marriage on the basis of love. She was still in the throes of a disappointed romance when Duncan came along. Considerably older than her, wealthy, suave, patient, considerate—she accepted his proposal to save herself from despair.

JOYCE CAPTIVATED

Joyce had been granted a free hand in her movements. She became a devotee of bridge. She had always loved the theater. And occasionally she went to some affair with her friends. And on one such occasion she met Malcolm Bragner.

Now, Malcolm was not what one would describe as an Apollo or that modern version—a movie star. But he exuded an air of far-away places, of exotic living, of derring-do and mystery. He was an explorer—and made the most of it both in the jungle and the drawing room.

Joyce was captivated by his off-hand, bold conversation. His talk of wild animals and wilder cannibals as if they were mere stage scenery gripped at her heart-strings. His nonchalant courage stirred her. And his manner of crinkling his eyelids and letting his blue eyes widen smilingly under them—appeared to her the essence of wisdom.

Before long, the two began to be seen too often in each other's company and Joyce blandly confided to her friends that in all honesty to her husband. She was planning to go to Reno. Yet, something—a vague, indefinable feeling—kept her from making the step or even giving a hint to him.

Her friends, of course, were trying to dissuade her. They saw in her sudden flare-up of love, the wrecking of her life. The clear-seeing knew that Malcolm Bragner was an incorrigible bachelor. When the huntress came too close, when Cupid's arrows began to take effect—Malcolm had a way of suddenly slipping out of town and the next anyone heard of him was through the newspapers.

INVITED TO LECTURE

But their problem was to persuade Joyce of these facts.

The friends discussed long and secretly the ethics of their plot. However, even the most reluctant was finally persuaded. They wanted to prove it to Joyce. So they rented a suite close to Malcolm's and then engaged a gumshoe man to wiretap it for the dictagraph. Officially, the suite was the headquarters for some dance and charity committee. So long as it was sufficient excuse to allow all kinds of visitors.

It was not long before the fly stepped into the spider's net. Malcolm dropped in informally. Of course, they had invited him there. The talk opened in a bland, informal way. Would Mr. Bragner be interested in delivering a lecture on his explorations for the benefit of charity? Malcolm said he was flattered, but—of course—there should be some sort of consideration for his trouble. The presumed chairman of the Ladies Committee believed it could be arranged. Impersonally, she shifted the conversation—to gossip.

"Did you know," she asked Malcolm, "that the lovely Mrs. Joyce had arranged to go to Reno?"

Malcolm, trained in the ways of the world, batted no eyelash. Of course, it was a surprise to him.

"How soon will that be?" he asked, with an appearance of non-interest.

"In about a fortnight," came the answer, "then, of course, it takes six more weeks before the decree is passed by the courts."

PLANS TO LEAVE.

"Two months, eh," said Malcolm, still with the same non-affectedness, "well, it's too bad. I won't be able to attend the coming out party. I'm leaving for India in a month."

"Will you leave us so soon?" asked the presumed chairman of the Ladies' Committee. "When did you make these arrangements? I haven't heard a word about it."

"The arrangements were completed this week," answered Malcolm, still calmly, "I didn't want to talk about it until I was all set."

"We will miss you," answered the presumed chairman of the Ladies Committee.

* * *

"I know it will hurt you," said the friend, "but the pain will be easier now than later. You were only a lark to him."

Joyce wept the entire afternoon, but she washed up before her husband came home, and greeted him with a smile. After dinner she cuddled up in his lap.

"Darling," she cooed, "I love you as much as ever."

"What is it now," smiled Duncan, "a new coat or a string of pearls?"

Grooming

Intelligence Adds Charm to Beauty

TO BE ATTRACTIVE and charming, a woman has to have brains that get up and go round like a wheel. The dumb ones if blessed with inherited good looks can make pretty spectacles of themselves, but the intelligent woman goes considerably farther along the road of pulchritude. She is gracious. She has poise. She offers no rude criticism; she purrs and never scratches. Most of all she learns how to get along comfortably and happily with her fellow creatures and that is half of life's battles. She cultivates tolerance, which gives to her countenance a beatific radiance.

Deform the Foot

RUN-OVER HEELS deform the bone structure of the foot, strain the tendons, make ankles thick. High heels with small bases, wear at the offside more quickly than heels that are lower and wider. Chiropodists claim that not more than ten women among 100 have perfect feet and that practically all foot ills are the result of shoes that are not the right size or of proper lines.

"HAD CONSTIPATION SINCE BIRTH OF MY FIRST CHILD"

Then Mrs. King Discovered ALL-BRAN

We quote from her voluntary letter:

"I have suffered from terrible constipation since the birth of my first child — 9 years ago! I have tried everything and nothing had any lasting results. Very reluctantly I tried your 'ALL-BRAN' with no faith in it at all. Much to my surprise, I have not had to take any medicine since starting to use ALL-BRAN, 4 months ago."—Mrs. Doris Eyre King, 16 Abbey Road, Oxford, England.

Laboratory tests show ALL-BRAN contains two things which overcome constipation: "Bulk" to exercise the intestines; vitamin B to help tone the intestinal tract.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that of leafy vegetables. Inside the body, it forms a soft mass, which gently clears the intestines of wastes.

Certainly this is more natural than taking patent medicines — often harmful. Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. If not, relieved this way, see your doctor.

ALL-BRAN also supplies iron for the blood. At all grocers. In the red-and-green package. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

"Wish I could cook spaghetti like this!"

"I'm always switching about, trying different brands, but I never seem to be able to get it to taste as delicious as this. Yours is always so fluffy and tender too! What do you do to make it so different?"

"Why that's as easy as can be! I simply make sure I get Mueller's. I used to try other brands, too, but I found that nothing else has Mueller's flavor and tenderness! And it's really most economical too, because it always cooks up to such a lot."

WHY MUELLER'S NEEDS ONLY 9 MINUTES' BOILING

The Mueller method enables the walls of Mueller's Macaroni and Spaghetti to be made as thin as it is possible for them to be, without collapsing in the cooking. Because Mueller's never varies, it always requires the same boiling time—9 minutes. It is richest in healthful nourishment and is more easily digested.

Mueller quality begins with the ingredients— only the very finest—and continues through every step of manufacturing and packaging

HAMPDEN TEACHES

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

It is not at all likely that you ever heard of the Walter Hampden School of Acting. And, perhaps, you never will, for it boasts of no systematized courses, nor does it send forth to the drama's adolescents a gilded prospectus. But the school, nevertheless, is a functioning organization, strictly academic in its teachings. The lecture hall is the rehearsal room in whatever playhouse Mr. Hampden presents "Cyrano de Bergerac"; the recitation hours are those taken up with the presentation of the play before paying audiences. There will be a week of this stern schooling at the Colonial starting next Monday.

• • •

More interesting than the cold announcement that Mr. Hampden has taken budding young artists under his wing is the discovery of who makes up the undergraduate personnel. Upon the rolls are several youngsters who have great names and traditions. Somewhere on the printed program of "Cyrano de Bergerac" you will find a familiar name, Robert B. Mantell, Jr., son of one of America's most brilliant actors of days almost forgotten. Then you will see the name of Edward Everett Hale, 3d, grandson of the author of "The Man Without a Country" and for many years Boston's most distinguished prelate and lecturer. Look again and you will find the name of Evelyn Goodrich, talented daughter of Arthur Goodrich, author of "Caponsacchi" and other outstanding works. As if these were not enough, you will also discover the name of Evelyn Venable as the Flower Girl. She is the daughter of Prof. Emerson Venable of the University of Cincinnati. These are the budding stars of tomorrow who are plodding earnestly in Prof. Hampden's Academy of Better Acting.

Vaudeville to Stay

[illegible] rumors of a seasonal, or [illegible], recess in vaudeville activities at the B. F. Keith Theater may be set aside as merely a matter of idle gossip. It is solemnly, even emphatically, announced from RKO headquarters that there will be no deviation from the present vaudeville policy except for a single week around Christmas time, when a condensed version of "The Desert Song" will take the stage and share honors with the regular film feature. "The Desert Song" has at last yielded to the lure of the tabloid, although its original sponsors put up a brave contest against temptations which, as it now appears, were insurmountable. In the better and brighter days of operetta, "The Desert Song" swept the country. Its musical numbers, composed by Sigmund Romberg, are still as popular as ever, as any radio program will reveal. Although the new version is a condensation, it will not be cut down to vest-pocket dimensions. That would be impossible.

Limited Engagement

Now for the day's news. Word comes from the Shubert headquarters that because Arthur Hopkins is anxious to hasten the New York presentation of Ethel Barrymore in "Encore," the engagement at the Plymouth, which starts Monday, will be limited to a single week. From the same Al Duffy (Shubert) office is broadcast the news that the long deferred engagement of Paul Muni in "Counsellor at Law" is now definitely set for the Shubert beginning Jan. 9. News also trickles through the usual channels of information that Cornelia Otis Skinner will be a visitor for a week during January at one of the Shubert temples, not yet selected.

LOOKING BACKWARD. Before he became a promoter of good publicity, Dennis Joseph Shea, who directs public relations for the local Erlanger theaters, dabbled in acting. He confesses to playing the role of maitre de hotel in a stock production of "The Man From Home" at the Majestic Theater in 1911, and later in a vaudeville sketch with E. E. Clive called, "Andy Rooney's Legacy."

Betty Williams, or perhaps I should call her by her screen and pen name, Elizabeth Meehan, has been very sick with the flu. She took herself out of her sick bed Saturday long enough to sign a contract with I. E. Chadwick to write the continuity and adaptation for "Oliver Twist." Yep, it's a Herbert Brenon production. Miss Williams has written many of the Brenon stories. Guy Standing, one of the famous English Standings, has signed for a part in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." Roland Young is relying on the improvement in his health to permit him to accept a part in "The Queen Was in the Parlor" for Paramount. Frank Vincent, formerly vice president of the Orpheum, has joined forces with the Harry Edington agency. Edington is the man whose advise is credited with having put Greta Garbo on the map.

By HARRIS MORGAN

After quite a long run of German pictures the Fine Arts screen is this week given over to the Russians. "The Tragedy of Dostoyevski" is the title; its matter is interesting and those particularly will enjoy it who go in for the literary and who love the Slav method in the cinema.

The new Soviet talkie offers a striking contrast to the motion picture technique of other countries and its general manner is after the style of the "Diary of a Revolutionist" shown at the Krasna theater some weeks ago. The cameras develop their story heavily; the sequences, rather than the whole, stand out as of photographic or dramatic value. Taken scene by scene, the picture is decidedly impressive but taken to order the production is definitely Russian in acting and treatment.

Naturally students will sit at attention as the panorama unfolds and to them will "The Tragedy of Dostoyevski" make its chief appeal. Last week it was Jannings in a magnificently knit German photoplay; that film's successor is almost its antithesis in some ways. Yet it does have great power in some of its sequences even if they do not form a powerful unit drama.

Rockabye Sets New Record at Keith's

Divisional Director William Raynor of RKO announces that Constance Bennett in "Rockabye," has established a new box office record over the week-end at Keith's. He adds that the picture will not be held over a second week, as a previous booking of "No More Orchids" prevents this.

"Maedchen in Uniform" Is Real Treat

The Cast

The Principal	Emilia Unda
Fraulein von Bernburg	Dorothea Wieck
Fraulein von Kesten	Hedwig Schlichter
Manuela von Meinhardis	Hertha Thiele
Ilse von Westhagen	Ellen Schwanneke

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

"Maedchen in Uniform," now at the Majestic, where it was given its belated Boston premiere last night, is simple in its unadorned theme of life in a girls' boarding school, but is so expertly handled that it is a screen achievement. Unique in its text and its treatment, it is turned, by sheer camera magic, into a saga of adolescent girlhood, to be understood and appreciated far beyond its German birthplace.

But once before has the sound screen sung with equal merit. That other instance was the Russian "The Road to Life." There the theme was boyhood, untamed youth roaming the highways. In the current picture, it is a case of youth in captivity, girlhood in the irons of the strictest discipline in a Prussian government institution whose pupils are all daughters of army officers. Its headwoman is a martinet whose only difference from a thoroughly trained bosh is her lack of the goose-step. The teachers mirror for the most part her blood-and-iron nature and tactics. One only is a complete exception.

Into this school with its military atmosphere comes a girl of 14, the central figure of the narrative. She is motherless. She is sensitive to the point of being a neurotic. Here where the children hunger for food and hunger for affection, she hungers for sympathy and love. The one teacher is kind and upon her the girl centers her heart. It is what passes in juvenile parlance as a crush.

The principal sees evil in the love of the two, and forbids their speaking to one another. The girl had blabbed her secret when tipsy from punch, following a school play. In her utter loneliness and despair, she is about to try suicide and she is saved in the nick of time by other pupils.

Quite a mild plot for a photoplay; that is true. Yet it is so humanly enacted, and so skilfully caught by the lens in a straightforward, genuine fashion that the film is soon getting under your skin in an amazing manner. Slow in developing, it never lets up once it has gotten its grip. It intrigues by its honesty, by the astonishing acting of everyone in the school, by the charm with which its theme throughout is handled.

That censors delayed the showing of this picture in America, is due to certain pathological implications. These remain; but such is the delicacy of treatment, that nothing obtrudes. And "Maedchen in Uniform" wins the added [illegible] of [illegible] treated [illegible] with [illegible].

There is greatness in this picture. It is an outstanding effort. It is a point over "The Road to Life" and often swings memory back to the greatest of all films, "The Passion of Joan of Arc."

These actors are all new to American audiences. Each is perfect in her role. It is a manless drama; even its director is a woman. So one may say that the fair sex has given the cinema one of its most distinctive and distinguished achievements.

Friday night at the Village Grove Nut Club. The effervescent Will Morrissey and a troupe of mimes present a series of high pressure skits all reminiscent of smoking car conversation. A little blonde gal offers a strip number. A stout, dark-haired fellow erupts with an impersonation of Jimmy Durante and later halts me to confide his name. Out of the bedlam, I leave impressed with two personalities—a stoutish—exceedingly stoutish gal, named Lulu Bates, with a powerful, resonant coon-shoutin' voice that rates her a spot in any musical, and a handsome young chap named Brooke Adams, with a pleasing baritone voice and modest delivery. Tall broad-shouldered Harold Meltzer enters with dainty Lois Wild. Owner of the famous Greenwich Village [illegible] and son of one-time drama critic, Meltzer seems [illegible] spirits. I learn later that he and his wife have squabbled and are living apart. Thursday night at the Hollywood restaurant, where a gal rushes over and whispers, excitedly: "Alice Kerwin just got a [illegible] mink coat," to which I reply I know no prettier girl to fit into a $3500 mink coat than Alice Kerwin. Evidently this is not the reply to make for my informant turns up her nose and struts off. Wednesday night on Seventh ave. . . . Little Ella Logan. A Scotch gal recently arrived from Europe with a reputation for being a sensational warbler of blues. A frail-looking lass who announces confidently: "I'll be the talk of this town of yours in a year—watch and see." Later at the Cosmopolitan Casino, a new type dance hall lodged in the premises once known as the Silver Slipper. A beautiful girl introduced to me as [illegible] Miss Syracuse," gushes exuberantly . . . "I love this place. I love the atmosphere. It's so refined, don'cherthink?—and so-so—you know—nothing uncouth, so to speak," and I agree with her, finding it very easy to agree upon almost anything with a pretty girl. . . . Among the hostesses I spot Bee Jackson and wonder why with all the publicity this girl has been getting in the magazine sections of our papers, she doesn't seem to get anywhere in particular in this country at least. . . . Ben [illegible] confides enthusiastically that "right in this room—right this very minute—before me is one of the biggest Wall Street men [illegible] would be surprised if I told you his name—and over there that young fellow—he's [illegible] number 1 in society. Thursday night at the Surf Club. Tommy Lyman croons a million verses of "Frankie and Johnnie" while a youthful magician unfolds his repertoire of amazing card tricks for the visible appreciation of blond Vicki Cummings. Startling tricks, they are too. One for instance still has me stumped. He places a card in your hand—say, the King of Clubs. He asks you to study it and then place it face down on the table covering it with your hand. "Name a card—any card," he implores. "Ace of Diamonds," you say. "Lift up your hand," he requests. You do and turn the card over. It's the Ace of Diamonds. You put it down and cover it again and name another card. "The Three of Hearts." You turn the card over and, of course, it's the Three of Hearts although at no time has the magician's hand been anywhere near the card. . . . Maybe I'm a softy for card tricks but I've been trying to figure this one out since Thursday. . . . Snapshots . . . The Voice of Manhattan.

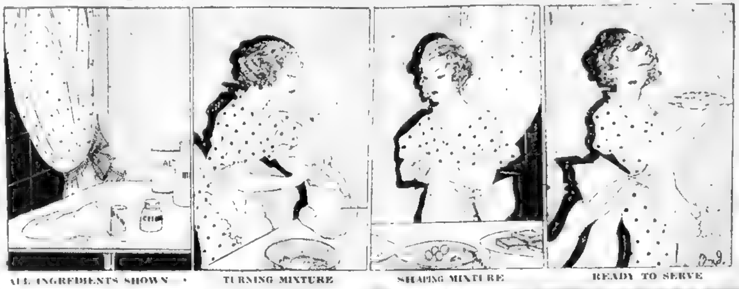
MARTHA LEE GIVES HOME MADE COTTAGE CHEESE RECIPE



ALL INGREDIENTS SHOWN — TURNING MIXTURE — SHAPING MIXTURE — READY TO SERVE

[illegible] home made cottage cheese [illegible] food of many virtues. First [illegible] it is healthful [illegible] economical and [illegible] perhaps the most important to the female of the species) [illegible] nonfattening. Add to all of [illegible] ease of preparation and [illegible] delicious things you can [illegible] with it and you have a pretty complete picture.

Personally I like to make cottage cheese with a junket tablet using [illegible] I heat one quart of [illegible] to 100 degrees F. Then add [illegible] junket tablet which I have crushed to a powder. I set this [illegible] in a warm place until the [illegible] set and then beat with a fork to break up the curds and [illegible] bag made of cheese[illegible] and let it hang until the whey [illegible] drained from the curds. Then I moisten the cheese with a little melted butter and a little heavy cream and salt to taste and shape into [illegible] balls.

The other method is to heat one quart of sour milk to 100 deg. F. until the milk has curdled. Then [illegible] in a pan of water warm enough so that you can hold your [illegible] you can count [illegible]. From time to time keep moving [illegible] so that all of it [illegible] gentle heat. In 10 or 15 minutes the curd will [illegible] from the whey and then all of the mixture can be turned into a coarse-woven cheesecloth or muslin bag and hung over [illegible] in a cool place.

Then when the whey has all drained off, season with 1 tsp. of salt to every cup and a tablespoon of cream. You will get about one half to three quarters cup of cheese to one quart of clabbered milk. Be [illegible] not to overheat the clabber [illegible] you will have tough [illegible] and if you let the cheese [illegible] too long in a warm place you [illegible] sour cream cheese.

[illegible] that we've done [illegible] correctly [illegible] we'll use it now [illegible] sandwich for the [illegible] man's lunch box. To a cup of cottage cheese and 1-3 cup of chutney put through a food chopper and use this as a filling for white, whole wheat, rye or nut bread.

For a savory cottage cheese salad mix together 2 cups of cottage cheese, 1½ tbsps. of French dressing, 1 tbsp. chow chow pickle, 1 tbsp. of minced pimiento, ¼ tbsp. chopped nut meats, and pack this into little individual molds or in coffee cups which have been wet with cold water. When chilled, unmold and serve individually with a garnish of lettuce or cress and mayonnaise dressing to which chili sauce has been added to make it a nice pink. A few whole nut meats may be saved to garnish the top [illegible] and for a very special "special" unmold the salad on slices of [illegible] tomatoes.

Another delicious cottage cheese salad is made with 1⅓ cups of cottage cheese, 1½ cups of strawberries (now that we can get the frosted kind we need not wait for spring) blended together with a little French dressing to which a tablespoon or so of honey has been added. Serve this individually in nests of lettuce leaves, garnish with mayonnaise mixed with equal parts of whipped cream and topped with two or three whole strawberries.

Creamed Eggs and Pimiento

Melt 3 tbsps. butter. Stir in 3 tbsps. flour and 1 cup rich milk. Stir constantly until thick and smooth. Add 6 sliced hard-cooked eggs (simmered for ½ hour and put in cold water to cool). Add 3 [illegible] pimientos and 1 cup of [illegible] canned mushrooms or [illegible] peeled, sliced and [illegible] minutes in 2 tbsps. of butter. Serve in patty shells or on [illegible]

Recipe for New Biscuits in School

It doesn't seem as if there could be much now in baking powder biscuits, does there, but we recently tried a recipe given us by another cooking teacher and liked it so well that we put it right at the head of our lesson sheet last week and used it in three recipes in school and four times since then at home.

Here are the ingredients and they don't sound very different from the ones we've been using so long—do they?—but the product is different, I'll guarantee. (I doubled the recipe—now I think I'll treble it to keep up with the demand.)

RICH BISCUIT RECIPE

1 cup bread flour
3 tsps. baking powder
½ tsp. salt
¼ cup butter
1-3 to ½ cup milk

Sift dry ingredients, cut in the butter and add the milk. Toss lightly on floured board. Handle as little as possible.

We used this biscuit dough in making an Apricot Roll with Apricot Hard Sauce and a lovely Apricot Glaze. And then we made some Good-Bye Shortcakes with creamed meat between them. Then we put a little bit more milk with the mixture and put it through the pastry bag and big rose tube and made Marmalade Teas—little mounds of luscious biscuits with ½ tsp. of marmalade put in a depression in the top of each before baking.

It was a pretty good lesson last week anyway—why don't you send for a copy? It included some nut tea wafers that were delicious, calla lilies to serve with bridge ice cream, open guava jelly and cream cheese sandwiches, a White Fruit Cake with Opera Icing and Raspberry Tartlets that I'm sure you'll want.

Only two more lessons before graduation. This week we're making George Rector's recipe for well dressed finnan haddie, a special creamed smoked shoulder in a noodle ring that's economical and snapping good, a salmon and egg loaf with egg saute potato turnovers that offer the nicest possible way of using up leftover meats, a savory meat pudding, Spanish sandwiches for Sunday suppers, an upside-down ginger-bread cake with pineapple and some cute candy cookies. Either of these recipe sheets, accompanied by a thin, loose 3 cent stamp for return postage.

THIS IS LIFE

Louisa Alcott's One Great Book Lives Despite Her Own Dislike

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

R. E. ROGERS

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO TODAY Louisa May Alcott was born. Not in Concord, Mass., as you might suppose, but in Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, for her father, the egregious Bronson Alcott, was a philosopher of the school of the Peripatetics. Accompanied by her mother, he wandered hither and thither, preaching his doctrines of education, the simple life, the return to nature, transcendental knowledge, and all the other stock in trade of the visionary radicals of what was perhaps the most extraordinary and amusing period of American thought.

Later he settled down in Concord, where he could depend on having Ralph Waldo Emerson as friend, admirer, and occasional banker. Louisa grew up as one of a family of four girls who, with their mother, had a marvelous experience in continuously trying to make both ends meet. The father was fertile in resource and infinitely incompetent in practice. He started schools which failed because his theories were too advanced for the times, because he insisted on admitting Negro children, because he got tired of them and turned to other things.

Louisa May Had to Support Them

He started a model communistic colony, "Fruitlands," which is still preserved, where everyone should labor with the hands—excepting Bronson himself—and no one should eat root vegetables because they were of the earth, earthy. "Fruitlands" promptly went bankrupt.

When Louisa came eventually to write "Little Women," her one enduring book, she dressed up the old gentleman into the semblance of a reasonably sane and scholarly philosopher, instead of the utterly incompetent and cuckoo theorist that he was. The one authentic glimpse we have of the old Bronson is the scene in which Grandfather March is discovered teaching grandson Demi, son of Meg and John Brook, his alphabet by means of physical exercises, forming the letters with the arms and legs. That scene rings true; there is the essential Bronson.

To be the daughter of a philosopher was, as Louisa expressed it herself, "Like trying to hold a man in a balloon down to earth, while he is always trying to cut the rope." Obviously somebody had to support the family and it devolved on Louisa May, and that at an early age. The process by which the harum-scarum, tom-boy Jo becomes the care-worn, overworked writing woman laboring away at the "pap" which she despised, in order to make the family comfortable, is not a pretty one to watch.

You catch a glimpse of it in the second part of "Little Women," which although nowhere so popular or so well known, is a fine, tragic, truthful book. "Little Men" is pure fancy, the story of an unfulfilled wish, wherein the laboring spinster imagines herself with a kind husband and lovable children and a big school full of the boys she liked having around her. In "Jo's Boys," however, we catch another glimpse of the overworked popular author, beset by authors' delegations, autograph hunters and admirers, critics and such like, always tired out and frequently nervous and irritable.

Book No Hit With the Elite

She lived long enough to bury her aged father in the style to which she had accustomed him and then, almost immediately, she too, died, the author of the most popular book for young people of modern times.

It is curious, today, when we think of Miss Alcott's books as models of decorous living, prim morality and restrained manners, to remember that there was a time when careful parents rather frowned on the Alcott books because of their free and easy manners, their too colloquial dialogue, their general atmosphere of middle-classness. Both Barrett Wendell, the Brahmin, and Katherine Fulerton Gerould, that Tory among women essayists, testify to that. Young girls of the better classes were, apparently, discouraged from reading Louisa May Alcott, because her young people were rather vulgar and happy-go-lucky.

Among all the spiritual children of Charles Dickens, Louisa May was one of the most faithful and adoring. Also, one of the most legitimate. Page after page is sprinkled with the Dickens catch-words that everybody of that time might be expected to recognize. More than that, she had Dickens' happy faculty of mingling sentimental characters and events with those of broad, humorous caricature, if one excepts Aunt March and Professor Bhaer, but in "Eight Cousins" and "Rose in Bloom" Dickens runs riot, with the Aunt-Hill and all its eccentric elders, just as in the scenes of the drunkenness and death of Cousin Charlie, the method of Dickens lends emotional power to the ethics of Francis Willard.

In all except her one book, which was founded on actuality, she merely repeated the old formulas for young people's stories as they were known in the 70's and 80's. The contrast between the sweet, unspoiled country girl with the sophisticated and unhappy young women of fashionable city society; the incessant preaching of temperance; the emphasis on dress reform as against the absurdities of women's dress of the Eugenie period; the emphasis on liberal piety in an age of growing agnosticism; a clinging to the decorum of English literature against the rising tide of Walt Whitman and Mark Twain and the new American realism—these marked her books as they marked the thought of the time.

Didn't Think Much of Own Work

She probably knew a little better, since in a famous passage she stigmatized her popular works as "pap for infants," but in the main the spinster aunt attitude must have been pretty genuine. Obviously she felt that she was not doing what she wanted to do, for in her journals the dollar sign appears frequently after the notation of a manuscript sold, meaning that it was a mere pot boiler.

She adored Emerson, and her most idealistic hero—Mac in "Rose in Bloom"—is obviously a combination of Emerson and Thoreau, both of them just too good to be true. In Edward Bok's autobiography there is a revealing glimpse of Louisa, only a few years before her death, as she takes the young Dutch boy who is autograph hunting to see the aged Emerson whose mind is failing. She liked promising young boys and helped them as much as she could.

"Little Women" is notable because it is one of the few books which, laid in an earlier age in American history, still can be read by young people of today. The fact that it has no automobiles, airplanes, radio or moving pictures, does not seem to repel them. That is a high tribute to its sense of reality, to the actuality of its characters, the simple naturalness of its incidents, the wholesomeness of its picture of life. It has survived the great changes in our social system far better than more pretentious works. And since it has already survived the most drastic changes, there seems no reason why "Little Women" should not go on being read by our children and our grandchildren. Louisa M. Alcott has her little niche among the immortals.

LODGE AS BOULEVARDIER

THE LODGE SMILE REFLECTED IN HOLLYWOOD

LODGE A LA CHEVALIER

John Davis Lodge, a grandson of the late Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, has settled in Hollywood. Here you see him in flannels and open shirt as a Hollywood boulevardier. That's his dog Dodge's visit to Hollywood as lawyer started movie career.

The Massachusetts Lodges are now identified with movieland. By a long term contract John Lodge has associated himself with Paramount Pictures. From the active social life of Boston and New York, the grandson of the late senator is now settled with Mrs. Lodge in a beautiful Spanish house near lot activities. Soon his name will appear before the movie houses in Paramount features. No indication of what vehicle will first carry his name is made. Lodge halted his law practice to accept the offer of filmland fame. He rushed across the country in an auto and is now ready for his first call to face the camera. Lodge was photographed in the mirror arrangement in his Hollywood home.

Do you get that Maurice Chevalier touch? Lodge has been studying the art of make-up for weeks. You agree that he's making the grade. His wife—the beautiful Mrs. Lodge—whom you knew here as Francesca Braggiotti, Boston society dramatic star, has also entered the movie field. Quickly the Lodges have become an active part of Hollywood's social life. Watch your nearest theater for John Lodge. (Paramount Pictures.)

Cambridge Safety Island Mishaps Laid to O'Hearn

Declaring that the amazing total of accidents caused by the so-called safety islands on [illegible] ave., Cambridge, was due to neglect, Mosier B. Goldberg, chairman of the Cambridge Safety Committee today [illegible] City Electrician Timothy C. O'Hearn.

"The blame for the 236 accidents which have occurred in Cambridge in the last three years rests squarely on the shoulders of the Cambridge City Council and on City Electrician Timothy C. O'Hearn," Goldberg said.

"Had the council and the city electrician followed the recommendations of the safety committee a year ago, accidents would have been reduced 90 per cent."

Goldberg's statement came as a result of an accident Sunday in which a Medford girl was injured and a cab destroyed by fire when it hit a beacon post on one of the safety islands near Harvard sq.

The accident brought forcefully to the attention of Cambridge citizens the fact that one person was killed and nearly 500 injured in accidents caused by the safety islands.

Goldberg, who has called a meeting of the Cambridge safety committee for Friday, again will urge action on the year-old recommendations made to the City Council. The safety committee will seek to have safety islands lighted in such a way that they will be visible to motorists at least 100 feet away.

"Life and limb cannot be bought for dollars and cents," said Goldberg, "but dollars and common sense can dictate how lives may be saved."

JUST WATCH, LOOK AND LISTEN FOR A HAPPY YULE SEASON

STEPPING OFF CURB IS DANGEROUS PRACTICE. NOTE WIDE TURN AUTOIST MUST MAKE TO AVOID "JAY WALKERS" FIGURE HOW UNSAFE THESE PEDESTRIANS ARE...

WATCH YOUR STEP FOR SWINGING AUTOS

Out to make the Christmas season a happy one in every household without any injured in auto accidents, the Massachusetts Safety Council has opened a new safety drive for the Christmas shopping district. The picture above shows one of methods in which many are injured, stepping off curbings in the shopping districts while automobiles are still engaged in making the turn.

MILLING AROUND BETWEEN FAST MOVING LANES OF TRAFFIC--IS SUCH A FOOLISH STUNT. IT SAVES NO TIME. YOU INVITE ACCIDENT

EASY WAY TO GET TRAPPED BY TRAFFIC

It's a two way watch with careless pedestrians who mill around fast lanes of speeding traffic in the shopping district, for the traffic moves no matter how thick the shopping crowd. Shoppers will really save time if they wait for the lights to change.

DANGEROUS FOR YOUNG AND OLD

DODGING BETWEEN HALTED AUTOS--HELD UP BY TRAFFIC LIGHTS---A HIGHLY DANGEROUS HABIT. STOP IT

MACHINE AGE THE SPEEDIER

Haste makes waste in many instances and the picture above shows one way in which many are injured each year. Pedestrians trying to beat the fast moving traffic in an attempt to save a few moments of time. These moments many times result in long days of pain on hospital beds. Watch your step this Christmas. Keep on the well and happy list. It only means a little care. (Staff Photos.)

Toys This Year Offer Glee for Grownups

By DOROTHY ROE

It will be a lucky child this Christmas that will be able to wrest his Christmas toys out of the clutches of his entranced parents.

There isn't the slightest doubt that father will desert his Christmas pipe, lounging robe and leather cigarette lighter to play with junior's entrancing new loop-the-loop league.

It's a new and ingenius miniature reproduction of the dizzy "mile-high rides" and such at Revere, complete with a little steel car that zooms around the track. And it's all worked by dropping marbles in at the top of its "engine," letting them roll out at the bottom, be carried up, dropped down again and so on. Pratically a demonstration of perpetual motion, and no end fascinating. You can play with it for days.

And it's just one of the hundreds of new wrinkles shown in the toy displays of the big stores.

There's a new [illegible] question and answer game that is safe to be [illegible] by the adult members of the household. It rings a bell when [illegible] the correct answer.

Then there's a miniature football game that will have big brother excited, figuring out new plays.

Marble games are on the upgrade this year, and there are a thousand and one variations, including the elaborate boards on which you try to drop the marble into the 1000 hole by manipulating a metal knob.

There are battle games and indoor tennis sets.

There are bowling sets and archery sets.

And one new toy that will [illegible] entertainment [illegible] father and [illegible] friends is a horse race game complete with little tin horses and a nice, gaudy track. The trick which father may not explain to junior is that you place your bet on a horse and then root for it to win. Just as much fun and not nearly so expensive as the Kentucky Derby.

STURGES NAMED FOR NEW BANK

The new Pilgrim Trust Co. would be a bank to serve principally the small business man, petitioners for a charter told the state bank and corporation board at a hearing today.

While the board, consisting of State Treasurer Hurley, Tax Commissioner Long and Bank Commissioner Guy did not make a decision, it was intimated the charter would be granted.

Asked if they would be willing to [illegible] the bank some name other than the Pilgrim Trust, the petitioners through Attorney Lowell Mayberry said they would.

According to Mayberry, the president of the bank would be Allen W. Sturges, former vice-president of the Atlantic National, which merged with the First National. Sturges has had 25 years' banking experience.

Mayberry said deposits of $2,000,000 [illegible] been pledged for the bank as soon as it opened, with other promises that would bring total [illegible] to $3,000,000 before the [illegible] of the year.

Woman Jailed, 12 Cats Left to Police

The care of 12 cats became a problem for narcotic officers today when Margaret Church, 40, of Broadway, South End, was sentenced to one month by Judge Murray in Municipal court.

The woman, in whose home a hypodermic needle was found, admitted she is an addict and was sent to the House of Correction in an effort to cure her.

Special Officer Daniel Curran of the [illegible] told Judge Murray that when he and Federal Narcotic Agent Charles Burr arrested Margaret last night, she was surrounded with cats. He said the officers purchased milk and meat, leaving them with the janitor with instructions to feed the cats, of whom their mistress was very fond.

'Jimmy' Roosevelt Routs Gloom at Hospital

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE

"Jimmy" Roosevelt, son of the President-elect, took his famous Roosevelt smile and his newly-acquired Bermudian tan into the wards of the Children's Hospital today, and at once Mister Gloom scurried into oblivion.

There was nothing formal about the visit. Young Roosevelt was greeted upon his arrival by Miss I. C. Smith, superintendent of the institution, and under her escort was shown the expanse of hospital grounds and buildings devoted to the care of sick youngsters and the advance of preventative medical science.

With close and sympathetic attention the eldest son of the President-elect listened to Miss Smith explain that the Children's Hospital "recognized the close relationship existing between better medical care of sick children and the health supervision of apparently normal youngsters."

Through the surgical, medical and orthopedic wards went the visitor and to each case he paid particular attention.

"This is the son of the next president."

With this introduction the children smiled back in recognition of the smiling greeting of the good looking young man who came to them to ask how they were and if they were better.

"Oh, I'm not the president. My father is to be president," Young "Jimmy" smiled back.

"Well, shake my hand anyway, will ya?"

And Roosevelt did.

In this tour of the hospital Roosevelt discovered that the institution is not limited to race or creed, but is a haven of refuge for little boys and girls who misfortune has taken hold of.

Of special interest to him was the case of Lauretta Patterson, seven, happy-go-lucky despite that she was suffering from a dislocated hip.

Roosevelt spent about an hour at the hospital evincing the keen interest in the new appliances that daily are being put to use in the program of preventative experimentation.

'PASS THIS SHAKE ON TO YOUR PAPA, THE PRESIDENT'

JOHN CARDOZA JAMES ROOSEVELT

$100 Fine Paid in Nickels, Dimes

Five, ten, fifteen——

Clink, clink went the dimes, nickels and quarters, but Judge James A. Lowell in Federal district court continued his business, unmindful of the job that was Deputy U. S. Marshal John Carnes.

A few minutes before, Manuel Gonveia, alias Manuel Govia, of Taunton, pleaded guilty to illegal sale of liquor and Judge Lowell imposed a fine of $100.

The defendant smiled to the judge and placed before him a bag of silver to the amount. But the court didn't take his word for it until Carnes emptied the silver and counted the dimes, nickels and quarters in the presence of the defendant.

Veteran Reporter Tom Phelan asked the Taunton fruit store owner how he saved all his change.

IN DEPTHS OF DESPAIR

MRS. MARY JONES lives in New England. Every month was a nightmare to her. Her letter says, "I suffered periodical pains through my head, backache and female weakness."

She tried everything. Visited clinics. Nothing helped her. Finally she gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial . . . scarcely hoping it would succeed where more expensive things had failed.

But she was surprised. Through its tonic action, it built up her health . . . lessened her pain. She says, "My backache is completely relieved."

Bit of Hockey and Hunting for a Change

THE TWO COOKS and Boucher. It was the greatest front line on the ice until Toronto's Cyclone Kids, Charlie Conacher, Joe Primeau and Harvey Jackson, flashed like a three-tailed comet across the hockey firmament, making sieves of opposing defenses and giving every goalie in the league the nightmare. They still make up the trickiest, foxiest line in hockey, do the Cook brothers and M'seu Boucher, albeit in actual speed they are nosed out by the lightning Kid Line of the Leafs. Yes, if you asked the average hockey fan about front lines he would tell you that Primeau Jackson and Conacher make up the fastest line in hockey, the Cook boys and Boucher the trickiest, and our own Marty Barry Nels Stewart and Dit Clapper the most powerful and wickedest shooting. The three combinations undoubtedly are the three greatest front lines on the ice. You'll see two of the three great lines in action when the Rangers invade the den of the Bruins in the Boston Garden tonight. And with the two Cooks and Boucher harrying the defense and Barry Stewart and Clapper whizzing down the ice in cyclonic sallies and blazing at the nets, we hockey fans should be in the seventh heaven of delight and the goalies in purgatory.

THE TWO MASTER managerial minds of hockey also will be [illegible] ing when the Bruins and the Rangers go [illegible] at the top. Art Ross and Les Patrick have forgotten more hockey than most managers [illegible] know. It is a toss [illegible] which of the two is the smarter, better judge and director of players and [illegible] strategist. With all due respect to Col. Hammond of the Rangers, the distinguished old West Pointer hasn't been able to give [illegible] Silver Fox [illegible] the co-operation and aid Charlie Adams has given Ross. Nowhere either north or south of the Canadian border has hockey paid so handsomely as in Boston. The bigger the dough bag the [illegible] the purse strings and Manager Ross with President Adams furnishing the old dough was able to [illegible] out and buy and acquire players which Patrick with a shorter financial lasso was unable to toss a rope at. As far as managerial ability goes we would consider Ross and Patrick about on a par, with the pair of 'em so far ahead of other ice pilots save perhaps the sole exception of Connie Smythe as to make it no race.

LAST YEAR PATRICK had the edge on Ross. This year Art apparently has the map on the Silver Fox. The purchase of Stewart, Lamb, Burch and Hexmer apparently has strengthened the Bruins much more than has the acquisition of Seibert, Voss, Starr, Aitkenhead and Pettinger bolstered up the Rangers. The return of Red Beattie to the ice and Tiny Thompson's return to goal tending form also augur for the success of the locals. The Bruins benefited by their early and long training period at Quebec. The Rangers were handicapped by the late reporting of Frankie Boucher. You can take nothing for granted in hockey, any more than you can in baseball. But if with the possible exception of the champion Leafs the Bruins haven't shaped up as the class of the league then we don't know our hockey onions. How the Rossmen came to drop that game in N. Y. to the Americans is something of a mystery. The Bruins outclass the Americans [illegible] greatly as Notre Dame this year does Harvard on the gridiron. Even with all the breaks going against 'em it is hard to see how the Bruins were defeated by that other New York outfit. A game between the Bruins and the Rangers is a match. A game between the Bruins and the Americans [illegible] the Bruins tackle tonight and fur and feathers should fly.

THE ANNUAL WINTER Indoor Hunt of the Helen Winter Associates will be conducted amid the woods and ridges of the Hotel Westminster, tomorrow night, and great will be the lies you will hear. The carnage should be something awful. More moose will be brought down than ever yarded in the North Woods. Of course, the fibbing will be confined to the members themselves. The guests of honor, and they include Capt. Ben Pine of the good ship Gertrude L. Thebaud; Charles W. Birdseye, the Rockport sportsman; Tony Shea, the Swift River Adonis; Frank C. Pearce, chairman of the Fishermen's Race Committee; Michael Crowley, master hunter of criminals, and last, but not least, Dr. Norman T. Harris, the moose hunter, all will be sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. But as for us mere members, we can lie as much as we want to. For days all of us have been oiling up our larynxes and packing our fib kits with the choicest collection of tales Baron Muchausen ever dreamed of. Tomorrow night is the night we land even the fish that got away and every moose head will have a 72-inch spread.

WE HOPE "DOC" Harris gets a little time to tell us something about moose. What the good doctor doesn't know about the antlered monarch of the forest isn't worth telling. This year he got his usual head, one with a magnificent 57-inch spread. Doc blew the gang to a moose dinner. We ate so much meat that when we got home we disturbed the sacred silence of Waban with loud and raucous grunts designed to be an imitation of those of a moose lady seducing her knight errant. While practicing those moose calls we forgot to put on a Maxim silencer. The man next door called the police. We awoke the twins and the missus hasn't spoken to us since.

SOME OF THESE fellers who write hunting stories for the sports magazines should be on hand to hear Doc Harris give a Moose talk. Among other things, the good doctor can tell 'em that a moose doesn't browse on grass, but on the bark and foliage of spruce and birches. Grass, especially hay, gives his lordship a stomach ache. A moose's forelegs are so long and his neck so short that he couldn't browse on grass, even if he wanted to, without kneeling down. The good doctor probably will ask the writers to stop featuring the "stentorian call of the bull" in moose calling, for 99 times out of 100 the caller imitates the cow, not the bull. We doubt even if the good doctor can explain how a bull moose grows a 50 to 60-inch spread of horns in a few months every year after reaching full maturity. These 57-inch horns Dr. Harris brought home a fortnight ago only were "spikes" last April. How does Mister Moose do it, Doc?

EDDIE SHORE, JR. EDDIE SHORE

"He may be a bad man on the ice but he's just a tame guy around the house," according to Eddie Shore, Jr., young heir of the Bruins' defense star and rib wrecker, who is shown here laying down the house law for his illustrious dad.

'SONNY' SHORE GIVES LOWDOWN ON HIS DAD

By RILEY GRANNON

When it comes to taking razzberries from a gallery, Eddie Shore of the Bruins can [illegible] any wrestling [illegible] to men [illegible] bad for bad.

In fact, being the Bruins' most noted Bad Man, Eddie could win a booing contest by several precincts without counting the up-State or Canadian vote.

You and you and you all see to it that Eddie gets his share of the left hand laudations. And why? Because you think Eddie's a tough [illegible]

We were [illegible] the other day. Why [illegible] reward on Bad Man Shore? Is it because he's a bad man? And come to think of it, IS Shore the Bad Man the fans think him?

BEARDS LION

So, one thing led to another and the whole combined to head your ever inquisitive [illegible] for [illegible] would find out about the reputation Eddie Shore [illegible] how the Bad Man acted at home [illegible]

You [illegible] this information from Eddie Shore himself. Oh, no. Eddie Shore will [illegible] and keep on saying so [illegible] good man, bad man or indifferent.

Likewise Mrs. Eddie Shore is no one to interview on the subject. Mrs. Shore, who has seen her husband come home from a hard game with the Bruins looking like a cross between a blue turkey and something taken from a mummy exhibit from the art museum, refrains studiously from discussing the delicate subject.

There remains, however, one member of the Shore family who will talk. He's Eddie Shore, Jr., who joined the club two and a half years ago.

"Listen, buddy," he says. "You're all wrong. Why, my pop can't get through the second line of 'Little Boy Blue' without choking up."

DEFINITE IDEAS

You begin to realize that Eddie, Jr., has definite ideas on the subject.

"Well," you begin brightly, "what about all the penalties he gets? What is he doing in the penalty box, then? Knitting?"

"I'll tell you, buddy," says the Shore lad. "It's on account of mama. Mamma wants pappa to take it easy."

"So what?"

"So they got the penalty box, buddy. Then pappa can do just as mamma says."

"Well, look, Eddie, what about all the scars your pappa carries? What do you call those 14 stitches on his leg? And how many times do you suppose pappa has had his mouth sewed up? And how about the famous occasion he got two black eyes, a busted nose, a [illegible] mouth and several ribs wrenched all the same night?"

"You mean up in Montreal? That was before I joined the club, buddy. I'm speaking of nowadays."

AFRAID TO BE OFFSIDE

"Well, even nowadays," they do say, you know, your pappa can lay it on freely when he wants to.

"I'll tell you buddy. I don't go to the games myself. You want to know how pappa goes at home, am I right? Well, I say my pappa isn't a bad man around this ranch.

"He doesn't put the sign on anyone around here. I can't remember him trying a poke check or a little stick work on anyone on our club. Buddy, at home my daddy is afraid to be offside even.

"If he comes home late from the Garden, he goes around on tiptoes, looking for the arnica and the bandages in the medicine chest. The next day we have an hour of reciting 'Little Boy Blue,' or 'Little Jack Horner,' or son etody like that.

"I dunno. Sometimes I wish he would try a little of the bad man stuff around the house. Then maybe a fellow could play a little football around the parlor.

"You don't catch my daddy so much as sneaking a few jumps on the sofa—a little game I invented myself. He won't hold chariot races around the dining room table, either. What kind of a Bad Man do you call that?"

So it looks like you and you and you are all wrong. When you're talking about Bad Men, you can't mean Eddie Shore. No real bad man ever choked on the second line of "Little Boy Blue."

CHAPTER XXXVII

As the door swung outward I brought my left down in my own peculiar kind of a hook, which I had learned playing with a kitten and I knocked out one of the [illegible]

[illegible] man standing on the step and he kicked my under [illegible] and sent me to my knees. I grabbed the man who had kicked me by the knees and dragged him down.

After I had washed up, Dan told me that my opponents were still [illegible] up the entrance. I stepped out and held a group standing at the top of the stairs on [illegible]

"These fellows fell downstairs," I said. "Somebody had better take them to the hospital."

Kid's Foe Hurt

As I started toting the other up the street he made a quick twist and whipped out a big revolver. I was too quick for him and before he could shoot wrenched it from his grasp and banged him over the head with it so that I learned after 16 stitches were required to repair the damage.

The next morning my wife brought me the papers in bed and I learned that the men I had sent to the hospital were Lefty Louie, the big one, and Gyp the Blood, whose gun I had.

They refused to talk to the police but it was predicted that one life [illegible] pay for their injuries. All sorts of gang war theories were advanced to account for the terrible beating received by those two noted figures of gangdom.

I called Big Jack Zelig, a member of the gang and asked him if there was any hope of squaring the feud I had pulled down upon myself.

Five or six hours later Big Jack called me and said, "No Kid—they're bound to get you. Your only hope is to get out of the country as fast as possible."

So I sailed for England and before my return to the U. S. the [illegible] had been electrocuted for the murder of a gambler.

Rejoins Family

Presently Alice and I came to a parting of the ways, not abruptly, but following a series of painful attempts to get along without each other. After the trouble we had was [illegible]

I was the rover, restless, wayward with an abnormal appetite for change and variety. Alice went to Aix-les-Bains, in France, and I headed for California, where I had established my mother and sisters in a home at Eagle Rock. Father had died.

As the World War became more and more of a dreadful reality threatening to drag itself out for years, I cabled Alice, pleading with her to leave Europe.

She did so and joined me in Los Angeles. We were well off for some time until quarrels parted us again.

Then came my experience as a journalist and later as a circus attraction. Meeting Harry Tammen, the Denver publisher, in San Francisco, I accepted his offer to go to Denver with him and become "brain editor" of his paper, The Post.

My final parting with Alice was ironic in the extreme. We were together in New York, having made up once more.

New York spares—Siebert, Dillon, Voss, Murdock, Keeling, Somers, Heller, Brennan

Since joining the N. H. L. Bruins and Rangers have engaged in many hectic ice battles. [illegible] have been the outstanding American clubs and have developed a rivalry second only in big league circles to the Maroon-Canadien feud.

Until last season the Bruins held the whip hand over the Rangers. The Rossmen attempted to play [illegible] style of hockey last year of which they knew little and [illegible] was right up the Rangers' alley and lost four and tied two [illegible] with Lester Patrick's charges. Now the Rossmen are back at their [illegible] bruising type of hockey, mowing down opponents at [illegible] winning ball games.

RANGERS IMPROVED

Like the Bruins, the Rangers are a more formidable outfit than last season. John Ross Roach, Dutch Gainor, Hib Milks and Vic Desjardins no longer sport the blue shirts of the New Yorkers but in their stead are Andy Aitkenhead, Carl Voss and Babe Siebert.

Aitkenhead has been in [illegible] of the Canadian-American League for two or three years alternating between Springfield and the Bronx. He may not be rated as highly as was John Ross Roach, but nevertheless he is a fine goal minder.

The tumultuous Babe Siebert has added both strength and fight to the Rangers and can be relied upon to strut his stuff tonight and as usual will have a few run-ins with the belligerent Mr. Edward Shore.

Carl Voss is a newcomer to this section as a pro hockey player but he formerly lived in Greater Boston and will be out to show the old home folks that he has mastered the great Canadian pastime.

STAGED COMEBACK

Voss came up from the Buffalo team of the International League, where he starred for three years. He was tried out by Toronto a few seasons back but Jim Spring broke his jaw and for a time it was believed that he was through as a player, for along with the fracture he suffered a complete breakdown. Voss, however, staged a wonderful comeback and he has been playing great hockey for the Rangers.

The Cook brothers, Bill and Bun, with Frank Boucher are the mainstays of the Ranger attack. This trio is the greatest goal-getting combination in the annals of hockey. In six seasons of major league hockey the three have scored the amazing total of nearly 700 points, 672 to be exact.

Ching Johnson and Earl Siebert will be on the outer defense for Rangers. Johnson and Siebert are rugged checkers and it will be interesting to see how much success they will have bringing down such giants as Capt. Dit Clapper, Nels Stewart, Marty Barry, Eddie Shore and Lionel Hitchman.

Passing the Puck

By BILL GRIMES

Although the Bruins are a better balanced and more powerful aggregation than that which [illegible] before the Rangers a year ago, they will have their hands full disposing of the Blue Shirts [illegible] at the Boston Garden.

For years, the rivalry between the Rossmen and the Patricks clan has been of the keenest variety and at times bitter. The Bruins and Rangers have fought through many thrilling battles, and until last season the locals held a slight edge.

Both the Bruins and Rangers are stronger than a year ago. Nels Stewart, Billy Burch and Obs Heximer have added power to the Rossmen, while Babe Siebert and Carl Voss have put an extra punch in the blue shirt outfit.

Joe Lamb, who has been out of the game with a broken [illegible], may get into the lineup tonight. Joe is in fine condition as he has been skating daily and Dr. Martin Crotty, the Bruins' physician, stated that [illegible]

[illegible]

Harvard has an unusually fine hockey prospect in Milton Pruyn, who starred with the freshman sextet last year. Pruyn is a St. Paul's School product and he will step into Barry Wood's shoes without a struggle.

The Boston Hockey Club is experiencing trouble booking [illegible] league games, but Manager Bill Flynn expects to iron out his difficulties within a few weeks.

"Hago" Harrington was tried out by Les Canadiens this fall but returned to his old stamping grounds in the Providence Auditorium.

Hockey players have complained that they never get a chance to say what's on their minds, if any. The action is too fast they don't get much chance to talk. So the American has opened its news columns to them. They can say what they want about each other or about themselves. Here they go. Introducing Bun Cook who introduces Ching Johnson.

[illegible] He has three children. [illegible] swings a very mean skate. And that shows what [illegible] can do even with [illegible].

Ching is not a novice at this game. My father used to tell me about him. He goes way back to the [illegible] Peter. And that's going back farther [illegible] seven years with the Rangers and the Lord knows how many [illegible] in the amateurs.

His pet hate is cats. Not Persians or toms but every old kind. [illegible] of twenty-three cats have been used to sew him up.

TITLE AT STAKE WHEN WINSTON FACES SCHAAF

"Didn't Winston lick Schaaf in their last bout?" demands McMahon. "This makes Winston champion. Titles are still won and lost in the ring. Any attempt to hand the title to Schaaf on a silver platter will cause public sentiment to favor Winston.

"It's too early for guessing," I answered. "Who are you?"

"This is Lottie."

"Lottie." I never knew but one Lottie in my life, and that was my first wife. I haven't seen her or heard from her in almost 20 years.

"Well, this is Lottie—the girl you married in Ohio. I'd like to talk with you, Norman."

In all innocence I said, "Fine. I'll meet you this afternoon."

By HELEN ROWLAND

SOME OF THOSE FIERCE and bitter denunciations of [illegible] of the perfect [illegible] would make a [illegible] amusing reading for the modern woman.

• • •

Helen Rowland

Imagine the tired business girl home from a hard day at the office slipping into her pajamas—beg pardon, pyjamas—lighting her cigarette and picking up a newspaper of 20 years ago to read a passionate plea for woman's "right" to do a man's work and share his privileges. Or a violent protest, declaring that "women are no weaklings!"

• • •

What many a girl is looking for today and can't find is some man who will tyrannize over her and MAKE her stay at home and get her beauty sleep while he goes out and hustles for the bacon.

• • •

A man who will think of her as a "weakling" when it comes to things like getting the car out of the garage, changing a tire, getting up in the dark to answer the telephone and settling the dinner check.

• • •

A man who will "There, there, little girl," her when she's feeling all in or blue; who will pat her on the head and put on her galoshes and baby her occasionally and make her feel coddled and "cherished" and all that.

• • •

A "tyrant" who will insist on lifting all the responsibilities off her shoulders and doing all her heavy thinking for her, instead of leaving her to work out the problem of how to stave off the installment collector, or where to get the money for the Christmas shopping, or what to do when the roof leaks.

• • •

• • •

• • •

• • •

Lots of modern girls would like to know how it felt to be tenderly treated as "weaklings." But it all depends on what you MEAN by "weaklings."

• • •

It was great fun in those exciting pre-war days when woman was [illegible] for the right to earn her own living, do her own [illegible] her own life. But now that she's got all these [illegible] she sometimes [illegible] that she had her [illegible]

HUBBUB OVER, DEBTS ARE LIKELY TO DIE DOWN

By B. C. FORBES

New York, Nov. 29—Yesterday's drop in the value of Britain's currency, sterling, suggests [illegible] tions. Britain is reaching the conclusion that she must pay [illegible] 95,550,000 due on December 15. This time Britain, France or other debtors must deal, not with President Hoover, but with Congress. In [illegible]

[illegible] a example in repudiating obligations. It is inconceivable that her statesmen do not realize this stern [illegible].

France is abundantly able to pay the 19-million-odd dollars due next month. She is slyly trying to sneak under the British umbrella. Whereas Britain has paid us a billion and a quarter, France has paid far less than she received for war materials [illegible]

[illegible] MEANS BUSINESS

Reports [illegible] this country [illegible] conditions in Britain have lately improved substantially. Automobile sales for example show great increase over a year ago.

I am a commuter. Lately there has been only standing room on trains. Explanation: Christmas shoppers. From various sources I learn that the more popular New York stores are now doing very brisk business.

President J. J. Lyle of Carrier Corporation gives me this interesting news: His company has booked [illegible] million-dollar air-conditioning job, the largest in history, for the broadcasting studios and lower floors of the 70-story Radio Corporation of America Building now under construction in Rockefeller Center. The two theaters in Rockefeller Center are also being air-conditioned by Mr. Lyle, cost [illegible]00,000.

"PRE-COOLED" CARS

It will probably astonish you to know that more than 2500 railway sleeping and chair cars on 10 different railroads were "pre-cooled" [illegible] last summer before starting their runs. There are now in operation [illegible] six full trains equipped with complete air-conditioning systems. The new S. S. [illegible]

It is high time the Treasury Department took steps to float long-term Government bonds bearing a rate of interest which would attract wealthy investors. It is unhealthy for our banks to be surfeited with Government obligations. It reduces their true fluidity and liquidity.

One reader suggests that this column urge John D. Rockefeller and other large investors as well as rich institutions permitted to do so under the law, to announce publicly that they had decided to sell large blocks of Treasury certificates in order to reinvest the money in high-grade common stocks.

"Do you not believe that the effect in the way of reviving confidence in American securities would be instantaneous?" he asks.

I'm sure it would.

Mr. Macauley tells us [illegible] trary to popular belief has not been diminished by the depression out of proportion to their relative position in the industry. In other words the higher-priced cars have held their own proportionately. Mr. Macauley believes the legalization of light wines and beer probably would have a good psychological effect on business.

"Anything that will restore the liberties of the people will help," he declares. "We have had too much restriction of our liberties in many ways."

Numerous editors call those who fail to vote at elections [illegible] Probably the percentage of stockholders who do not vote at annual meetings of corporations is quite as large if not larger, than that of the public electorate. Incidentally, it is recalled that Zachary [illegible]

"Business in gift sets of sheets and pillow cases has taken a noticeable upturn and if our volume thus far this month is maintained our total for the year will be close to that of 1931, which established the peak for gift sets," declared Treasurer Ernest N. Hood of Pequot mills, Salem, Mass., today.

"Sales of this type of merchandise, while fairly good throughout the year, began to show a real surge in late October and early this month," he said. "Since election orders have shown further increases.

"The retail trade has been later than usual in placing orders this year, but apparently have encountered a consumer demand which justifies them in putting in complete assortments of sizes and colors. Merchants in various sections of the country report a greater interest in practical gifts than at any time in several years."

—STATE ST.— Hears:

That general prices have acted extremely well when it is considered the financial atmosphere has been saturated with pessimistic prophesies regarding the outcome of the debt negotiations. It now begins to look as though England would meet her interest payment, while taking advantage of the clause in the original agreement which allows her to seek a moratorium of two years on the principal due at this time. After that, Britain will probably seek and receive a lower rate of interest.

Technocrats

Just as in late 1929 a new group hailed the beginning of a new era [illegible]

[illegible] as technocrats. They and their ideas are not new, but only recently have they been grouped under [illegible]

[illegible] However since the original conception of machine labor was higher wages, lower costs and shorter hours the answer may lie in one of the other two factors.

Possible Solution

A recent statement by John Willys seems to hold a clue that may prove to lead to the answer. He said automobiles cost too much. He is going to make them cheaper. It is just possible that lower costs resulting in cheaper products which wear out faster, will absorb the present troublesome labor surpluses.

In other words we will probably step up the consuming power of the nation to a point where it uses the products we can make on a uniform and shorter work week [illegible]

The real trouble, insofar as the man in the street is concerned, is the number of the men who admit the theory of technocracy defies solution. Some of the most important traders are lined up behind it, just as important bulls enthused over the new era plans of 1929.

LIVE NEWS OF WALL STREET LEADERS

STOCKS were evidently being supported by powerful interests in Wall Street today, the market actually gaining ground in spots in the [illegible] another drastic break in the British pound. The further fall in the pound gave backing to speculative belief of Britain would pay its December debt to the United States.

Studebaker Preferred Dividend Prospects

Short Interest in "X Preferred"

A private survey among brokerage houses indicates a fair-sized short account exists in United States Steel preferred. Probably the short interest is smaller in the preferred than in the common, but then trading in the preferred is much smaller than in the junior shares, the total issue is smaller and the "floating supply" is much less.

Sizable Proportion of "Floating Supply"

From these and similar reports it was indicated the total short account in Steel preferred probably [illegible] a sizable proportion of the floating supply of the issue, [illegible] 300,000 shares. [illegible] of September investors held [illegible] shares of the outstanding 3,602,0000 Steel preferred shares, or 91.41 per cent. Against the total issue the short account probably is small, but the speculative significance can be appreciated only by comparing it with the floating supply.

Fewer Dividend Cuts Anticipated

Current week will give the street some relief from unfavorable dividend news, judging from the expected outcome of meetings scheduled during the period. Of approximately 20 payments due for action only two or three are considered as likely to undergo revision. The list of companies includes International Business Machine, Wesson Oil & Snowdrift, G. W. Helme, Hercules Powder, Lorillard, Safeway Stores, Dominion Stores, First National Stores, McKeesport Tin Plate, Pacific Tel & Tel, R. J. Reynolds, Universal Leaf Tobacco, National Tea, Auburn, Cannon Mills, Detroit Edison and Endicott Johnson.

—SPECTATOR— Says:

Apparently somebody is buying stocks, but this doesn't alter the fact that as yet no reason has appeared for the little fellow to do the same. If we were short, we would be very nervous, probably more so than being long. The prettiest position, though, is being out entirely and waiting for the "cat" to jump.

Debt Business

All that is heard is this and that on the war debts, how to solve them, etc. . . . the thoughtful opinion is that the debt things is being overdone and that it will gradually work itself out. The fact that it is out in the open is something anyway . . .

Class 1 railroads are expected [illegible] stocks and bonds is linked with the drop in Canadian currency due to the break in sterling, today again at a new low.

Here and There

Copper men will be surprised if anything develops from the conference starting today. [illegible] there. What they're going in for 'tis said, are stocks that have fairly assured dividends and big yields, thus able to "pay their board" even if they do go lower . . . Not a bad policy.

Through all this tipping of the gold stocks, it is well to remember a good deal of the recent buying has been as a hedge against short positions in leaders like Steel, Telephone and Allied Chemical . . . Apparently a few outsiders got in at the same time and are trying to play them up so they can get out at a profit . . .

STOCKS MIXED IN BOSTON

Boston Elevated sagged more than a point and Edison Electric was down more than 2 points from last night's close. New England Telephone was down a point, while American Telephone converted an early fractional loss into a gain of about a point.

Aviation Securities dropped a major fraction. Nash Motors and Stone & Webster showed slight recessions. United Shoe hovered around its previous closing level for the greater part of the session.

26 MILLION IN CASH GONE IN INSULL CRASH

By M. L. RAMSAY

Chicago, Nov. 29—Capital amounting to at least $26,000,000 which investors poured into Samuel Insull's utility empire, actually was lost or vastly diminished in non-utility ventures ranging all the way from American movies and Canadian mines to butter and cheese and South American oil.

This is revealed in records relating to Insull companies now in receivership which re-invested in scores of corporations and syndicates having no visible relation to Insull's electricity and gas.

$1,000,000 ON REALTY

[illegible] than $1,000,000 poured into eight companies and syndicates promoting ambitious real estate projects which now are mostly shattered dreams. One, the Port Isabel Corp., projected a Texas port and townsite, development of citrus fruit lands, irrigation and operation of 23 miles of railroad.

At least three Insull companies were drawn into the financing of [illegible] great civic opera building enterprise in Chicago, investing about $224,000 in stock now worth about $2500.

Insull Utility Investments, Inc. and Corporation Securities Co. invested approximately $676,000 in stock of the General Theater Equipment Co., a holding company which controlled Fox Theaters Corp. and other motion picture interests, and which went into receivership six weeks ahead of the Insull companies.

Small blocks of stock of Audio Cinema Inc., and Van Tassell Sole and Leather Corp., were bought by the Second Utilities Syndicate, an Insull utilities subsidiary, through Samuel Insull, Jr. Young Insull was president of the syndicate. The leather company went bankrupt last November according to the auditors. The fate of the cinema company is not disclosed.

$9,000,000 IN N. E.

Helping to underwrite a $5,500,000 stock issue of the Consumers Co., dealing in ice, coal and building materials cost Insull Utilities and Corporation Securities $1,000,000.

Two-thirds of the total assets of Insull, Son and Co. of Canada, were a $100,733 investment in the Manloof Mining and Finance Corp. Ltd., described as "an investment trust with a portfolio of mining stocks."

Other Insull holdings included South American Oil Fields (Inc.), Rawley Mines Inc., Southwest Dairy Products Co., Asbestos Corp. of America and French Bayes Petroleum Corp. The how and why of their acquisition have not been disclosed.

Nearly $9,000,000 was invested in textiles, steel, tire fabric and other industrial projects in New England.

Approximately $10,000,000 was invested in brokerage houses for reasons which neither the auditors nor the suspended investigation by State's Attorney Swanson have made clear.

Value of Simmons Stock Is Lowered

Stockholders of Simmons Co. ratified proposal to reduce stated value of stock to $5,666,180 represented by 1,133,236 shares from $25,746,786 and to transfer the difference to surplus account. Present no-par shares will be converted into $5 par stock.

Business Returns Confusing

By LEWIS HANEY

(Professor of Economics, New York University)

New York, Nov. 29—The [illegible] returns bearing on business [illegible] are confusing. On their face some are encouraging. We have to remember however, that weekly comparisons are liable to irregular fluctuations, and that the election day week is an unusual occurrence.

Some of the figures a week ago are probably up because they fell so low in the election day week.

My frank impression is that industrial activity is rounding off. It usually does in the last two months of the year. I think that the letdown this year is likely to be a little more than seasonal.

* * *

For example [illegible] probably will reflect the rush to make up for the abnormally low coal production last summer now that winter is upon us.

Automobile production has increased further. Everybody is glad that laborers in that industry are getting the work. We hope that the cars are duly sold. As students of the general business trend, however, we know that new models are generally made up along toward the end of the year and that the increase in output mostly represents hopes that buying will develop later.

* * *

Bank failures were fewer last week and that is good news. The situation in Nevada has evidently not been entirely remedied as the moratorium there has been extended, but with bank failures getting down to almost negligible figures we may draw our financial breath more freely.

Hopes built upon the restoration of beer still exist, but considerable doubt about the early establishment of the beer business and taxes therefrom, has arisen.

Well posted persons tell me that the question as to what percentage of alcohol is "intoxicating" may have to be brought before the courts. That would mean delay.

* * *

Meanwhile, the old confusion about the Federal budget continues. Some claim that the budget is getting nearer to balancing. But there is still a tendency on the part of the administration to overestimate income from taxes and to omit the advances made to the R. F. C.

I think that the people are aroused on this matter and that we are going to balance that budget. We will probably have to recognize however, that this will mean either higher taxes or reduced government expenditures and activity.

We cannot expect the government to do everything and save everybody unless we give it more money to spend. And government spending means taxes.

* * *

Probably the least favorable practical point in business is the commodity price situation. Prices slumped again last week, including not only wheat and cotton, but also silver, steel scrap, wool, silk and gray goods.

There seems to be only one reason for this, namely, that supplies are excessive as compared with demand.

The renewed price decline certainly can not be attributed to gold. World gold production is increasing and our gold supply is near record levels. If business conditions were fundamentally sound, prices would almost certainly be rising.

Closing Steadier in London Market

London, Nov. 29 (AP)—Trading today on the stock exchange was more cheerful on the belief that the decline in gilt-edged securities had been overdone. This induced covering and a hardening of prices which synchronized with a slight recovery in sterling from its new low. Transatlantic issues, gold mining shares and German bonds were in good demand but oil shares were overshadowed by the Anglo-Persian developments. The closing was steadier.

Boston Safe Deposit Lending to Newton

Newton has awarded to Boston Safe Deposit & Trust at .77 of 1 per cent plus $3 premium, $200,000 loan due May 14, 1933. Other bidders were New England Trust Co., .83 of 1 per cent; Second National Bank, .86 plus $1; Shawmut Corporation, .89 plus $1; Jackson & Curtis, .93; Merchants National Bank, .97; Rutter & Co., .98; Newton Abbe & Co., 1.03 per cent and Faxon Gade & Co., 1.05 per cent.

Martin Chairman of United Electric

New York, Nov. 29 (AP)—Fred S. Martin, president of Coal Sales Corporation of Chicago, has been elected chairman of the board of United Electric Coal Companies. He succeeds the late Harry M. Taylor.

Bar Silver Is Weak

PRICE CHANGES ONLY NARROW FOR LEADERS

New York, Nov. 29—Price changes were only narrow for most leading shares in today's trading on the New York Stock Exchange. Another sharp break in the British pound failed to bring out noticeable selling.

The break, on the contrary, may have inspired some buying on the idea that it presaged payment of Britain's December debt to the United States.

TAKES ZIGZAG COURSE

The market pursued a zigzag course early in the day, but later firmed appreciably and entered the afternoon with most leading shares showing gains ranging from fractions to about a point. Rails were again in fair demand. After selling down about a point at the opening, Union Pacific and Santa Fe erased their losses and moved a point higher on the day. Southern Pacific, New York Central and Pennsylvania were slightly improved.

U. S. Steel held steady in a narrow range, most of the time a slim fraction above Monday's close. Gains were also made by Westinghouse, General Electric, General Motors and Standard of New Jersey. United Aircraft, American Telephone, Case, National Biscuit and Coca Cola gained as much as a point.

International Business Machines was a soft spot, declining about 4 points at one time, but later recovering some of its loss. The company's directors declared a regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 a share, but made no distribution in the form of stock dividend. Last year at this time a dividend of 5 per cent in stock was declared.

Market analysts stressed the relative steadiness of railroad stocks throughout the recent period of backing and filling. The improved undertone of this group was attributed not only to the manifest improvement in net earnings resulting from the autumn traffic gain, but also to hope that the nonpartisan Coolidge transportation committee recommend legislation of a helpful nature for action at the coming session of Congress.

COPPER PARLEY WATCHED

There was considerable conjecture over the new international Copper conference. It was freely predicted in the trade that much time would elapse before an agreement could be reached by the conflicting interests on the conference's two principal points: curtailment of production and orderly marketing of surplus supplies.

Nevertheless, hope was expressed in some quarters that concrete results might shape themselves after a series of secret meetings.

Trade reports contributed little by way of change to the picture of seasonally declining business. The reported weakening of crude oil prices in western oil fields was followed by reports that gasoline prices were easing somewhat in the Pacific northwest, but elsewhere no important price changes were revealed.

Apathy spread even to the gold mining stocks, where pools had made a display of activity in the last few days. The professional element continued to dominate the trading with outside interests on the sidelines.

Railroad returns for October show most carriers reporting an increase in net operating income over October, 1931. With addition of such important roads as New York Central and Baltimore & Ohio, both of which showed a betterment, indication is that the total for Class I roads will show reduction of only about 2 per cent below a year ago.

Extent to which roads are keeping expenses in hand is seen in the fact that with a 9.5 per cent improvement in gross in October over preceding month, net operating income increased about 28 per cent. More than half the gain in gross was carried through to net. Indications are that the October aggregate will be about $62,000,000, against $64,000,000 in October, 1931.

Of 62 roads to report for October, 33 registered improvement in net operating income over October, 1931. In September 27 of this group reported similar betterment.

Crown Willamette Profit Is $406,482

Crown Willamette Paper Co., including Pacific Mills, Ltd., for six months ended October 31 reports net (exclusive of profit on bonds purchased for redemption) of $406,482 after interest, depreciation, depletion, federal taxes and minority interest, equivalent to $2.03 a share on combined 200,000 no-par shares of $7 first preferred, against $1,604,513, or $6.66 a share, on combined 200,000 shares of $7 first preferred and 41,000 no-par shares of $6 second preferred for six months ended October 31, 1931.

Powell River Cuts Price of Newsprint

$103,900 Twine Order Awarded to Ludlow

Ludlow Sales Corp., subsidiary of Ludlow Manufacturing Association, has been awarded contract to supply the postoffice department with 1,200,000 pounds of jute twine at $103,900. This is the second large contract of this kind company has received this year.

Refined Sugar Is Cut

American Sugar Refining Co. has reduced refined sugar 10 points to 5 cents.

Business Future of U. S. Depends on Leaders

Cleveland, O., Nov. 29 (INS)—America's business future now rests largely in the hands of political leaders, in the opinion of Col. Leonard P. Ayres, vice-president of the Cleveland Trust Company, and one of the foremost authorities on economics in the country.

"What happens to business in the next year will depend primarily upon what the government does," Col. Ayres, in an interview today.

Ayres said the principal problems confronting the new administration, in the order of importance, are:

"2—An arrangement of some sort on war debts.

"3—Taxation. The nature of the tax changes in respect not only to the money to be derived but the businesses that will be leaned upon.

"5—The group of veterans' relief problems.

"6—The whole railroad situation, which, in some respects, is the most acute of our domestic problems."

He did not think the changing of administrations would tend to retard economic recovery. There might be "a mild hesitation" on the part of a small number of business men of the type who wait "to see what will happen."

The feeling of business men in the Cleveland area, Republicans and Democrats alike, is cheerful regarding the future. He said this is based on the belief that the very fact that the November election "so completely allocated power and responsibility on one party" would be beneficial.

Concerning business conditions in the Cleveland area, he said:

"Cleveland is an important producer of automobile parts. Therefore, we show a pickup in this respect before Detroit. As demand for the parts comes ahead of demand for automobiles, we feel that stimulant.

"There has been an improvement in paints and varnishes. Rayon trade is good. Employment has improved. Sentiment is distinctly better. Collections are a little better. I would say conditions on the whole are slightly improved."

Ayres, referring to business throughout the country, said the improvement in the volume of industrial production from summer to autumn "was the greatest proportionate increase in the same period of time in the history of the country." The people didn't realize this because business had dropped to such a low ebb.

Maine Central's Net Income in Oct. Notable Showing

A net income of $18,355.81 was earned over and above its fixed charges by the Maine Central Railroad in October, it is shown in figures made public today. The showing is a notable one made in a month when the railroad's operating revenue decreased $336,988.04 as compared with October, 1931.

For the first 10 months of 1932 the figures show a deficit of $360,460.71, as compared with net income of $167,870.58 for the comparable period in 1931.

Sharp reductions in operating expenses totaling $249,673.57 were made in October, the report shows, and further improved efficiency in operations is disclosed by a reduction of the ratio of operating expenses to operating revenue. This figure for October, 1932, was 71.62, as against 72.29 in the corresponding month of 1931.

The decrease in freight revenues was $238,524.66 (or 24 per cent), and the decrease in passenger revenues $56,085.16 (or 44.65 per cent).

19 NEW FIRMS IN BOSTON AREA

Establishment of 19 new manufacturing companies in Metropolitan Boston during October brought the total of new industries started here in 1932 to 190, the Boston Chamber of Commerce reported today.

This represents a gain of 14 new companies in the Boston area over the corresponding period of 1931.

Eleven of the new industries are in Boston; three in Lynn; Chelsea, Newton, Peabody, Wakefield and Woburn have one new company each.

The new manufacturing operations, together with the expansion of a number of existing industries have provided employment for some 500 persons.

Manufacturers of apparel are more numerous among the new firms than any other group. Other products being turned out by the new companies include wrought iron hardware and grill work, inks, shoe cutting dies, draperies and curtains, bleaching fluid, food products, brass castings and paper cups for the baking trade. Two new tanners of leather and two job printing companies are also represented.

In addition to the new industries, the Chamber also reports the expansion of some 14 existing companies.

Old French Failure to Pay Is Recalled

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER

New York, Nov. 29—France's present efforts to secure a revision of her contractual debt obligations to the United States recalls earlier claims growing out of spoliations to American commerce during the Napoleonic wars.

President Monroe's administration tried in vain to collect. Then John Quincy Adams, in his first presidential message to Congress, in discussing the subject, said that the claims were:

"For property taken or destroyed under circumstances of the most aggravated and outrageous character," and that "in the long period during which continual and earnest appeals have been made to the equity and magnanimity of France in behalf of these claims their justice has not been, as it could not be, denied."

Finally on July 4, 1831, a treaty was arranged under which France was to pay the United States $5,000,000 in six yearly instalments. Also France yielded certain claims in connection with the Louisiana treaty of 1803 and the United States arranged to pay France for claims amounting to a quarter of a million dollars.

On the first due date, France made no payment. It was later disclosed that the King did not present the matter to the legislature until after the due date.

After sending a special envoy to France and much futile negotiations, President Jackson, in a scorching message to Congress, in 1834, said:

"After the delay on the part of France of a quarter of a century in acknowledging these claims by treaty it is not to be tolerated that another quarter of a century is to be wasted in negotiating about the payment. The law of nations provides a remedy for such occasions. It is a well-settled principle of the international code, that where one nation owes another a liquidated debt, which it refuses or neglects to pay, the aggrieved party may seize on the property belonging to the other, its citizens or subjects, sufficient to pay the debt, without giving just cause for war. This remedy has been repeatedly resorted to, and recently by France herself towards Portugal, under circumstances less unquestionable."

Saugus Borrows in Boston

Saugus has awarded to Faxon, Gade & Co., at 4.48 per cent, $100,000 temporary loan notes payable $50,000 November 16 and November 23, 1933, respectively. Notes dated November 28, 1932. Other bidder was Merchants National Bank of Boston, 4.63 per cent.

STERLING OFF TO NEW LOW

New York, Dec. 29 (AP)—Another sharp break in the English pound sterling to $3.15¼ for cables, the lowest rate in history, again unsettled the foreign exchange market today.

With apparently no support forthcoming from the Bank of England control, the pound was off 3¾ cents at the opening of trading. Further short selling by speculators was reported.

At the same time French francs dropped to 3.90⅞ cents, a new low for the year. The gold import point of the franc is about 3.90⅝ cents.

Belgian belgas were off 1½ points to 13.84 cents, a price which is slightly below the gold import point. Italian Lira declined, as did Swiss francs, while Dutch guilders were fairly firm.

Dealers generally attributed the weakness of sterling and European gold currencies to war loan negotiations with the United States.

U. S. Treasury Dept. Calls for Deposits

United States Treasury has called for repayments of deposits from the second Federal Reserve district of $9,040,200 on Dec. 1 and a similar amount of Dec. 2. For the entire country, it has called for repayment of $18,185,700 on Dec. 1 and a similar amount on Dec. 2. These withdrawals will reduce deposits in the New York district to $231,145,256, and those of the entire country to $489,596,900.

$10,000,000 in U. S. Financing Coming

New financing of $10,000,000 for Federal Intermediate Credit Banks system expected to be announced soon. It will take form of issue of ¾ per cent debentures dated Dec. 15, 1932, and maturing in nine and 12 months.

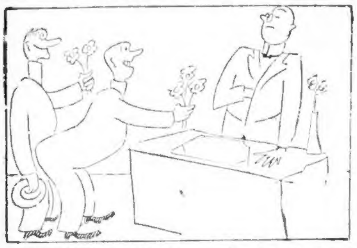
FLOWERS FOR THE LIVING



WASHINGTON.—Postmaster-General Brown has ordered postmasters to choose extra employes to handle the Christmas mail with a view to giving work to those out of jobs.

How very nice! How very nice! Postmaster-General Brown
What he has said, what he has done, should leave us overjoyed.
For, oh, his duty hard, but clear, he might have felt like shirking
And said: "Just give these jobs to guys who are already working."

'A MAN MUST FIGHT'

By Gene Tunney

Wills Spurns $200,000 to Meet Gene

SYNOPSIS

In previous chapters, the author has described his career from active-fisted days as a Greenwich Village office boy, through New York fight clubs prior to the war, his winning of the A. E. F. light-heavyweight championship as a Marine, his capturing that American professional ring title via victory over Battling Levinsky and his loss of it, badly whipped in one of the bloodiest contests ever fought in old Madison Square Garden, to Harry Greb early in 1922. After a rest and several good tune-up bouts, Gene changed managers (paying "Doc" Bagley $5,000 for his contract and signing with Billy Gibson) and finally cornered Greb for a return bout in the spring of 1923. Gene regained the crown, winning a close decision from Greb in 1923, repeating decisively in a third encounter; and during the summer of 1924 he stopped Erminio Spalla, European heavy champ, and Georges Carpentier in thrilling open air bouts at New York city. Financing of the latter match led to friction with Jimmy Johnston and also with the N. Y. State Athletic Commission. Tunney outpoints Greb in their final (fifth) encounter and definitely paves the way for a bout with Jack Dempsey by knocking out Tom Gibbons in the 12th round on June 5, 1925. "Cowardly and contemptible whisperings" assail Gene's victories, "set-ups" and "dives" being alleged while Harry Wills, "pet challenger of the boxing commission," clamors for the first crack at Dempsey.

By GENE TUNNEY

On July 3, 1925, I boxed in Kansas City, Kan., Italian Jack Herman, whom I knocked out in two rounds. Wondering why the first metacarpal of my left hand, was still sore, I went to see a doctor.

He examined my throat and said the soreness was probably due to diseased tonsils. He suggested I have them removed.

I came East and after having this diagnosis corroborated by Dr. Bob Shea had the tonsils removed.

While recuperating, Bill McCabe, my old friend from the A. E. F., and I took a motor trip through upper New York state. Bill being confidential agent to the superintendent of state prisons, we visited a few prisons. While in Dannemora, McCabe received a telegram from Tex Rickard, whom he had never met, requesting him to come down to New York for a conference. We imediately suspected it had something to do with me, as the New York papers carried the news that McCabe and I were visiting the prisons. This was about the end of July, 1925.

Rickard told McCabe he was unable to get in touch with Billy Gibson, my manager, to talk over the possibilities of matching me with Jack Dempsey.

Rickard later told me Commissioner Muldoon and he decided on that match and Muldoon advised Rickard to make it immediately. Muldoon has corroborated Rickard's story. I had told McCabe that if the Rickard conference were for the purpose of getting in touch with me it would be fine if he would make an appointment for me. McCabe did and advised me by telegraph.

MATCH WITH DEMPSEY

Rickard and I met at the home of Jimmy Eagleton at Fourteenth st. and Eighth ave. a few days later. McCabe and I were in Eagleton's apartment when a limousine drove to the door — an unusual sight for this part of the city. We saw Tex step out with his walking stick on his arm and a cigar in his mouth. He looked around to make sure he had the right number.

Jimmy Eagleton ushered him up to the apartment. As he came in, I walked toward him with extended hand and on shaking it, Tex said,

"Gene, I want to match you to fight Dempsey."

"There is nothing I want more," I replied.

We sat and talked for about half an hour. In answer to my query why he had not got in touch with me immediately after the Gibbons match, he said:

"Gene, the next day I telephoned Gibson's office and have telephoned an average of three times a week since, but each time he is out. Billy owes me some money and he probably thinks I have been calling him to ask for it. To hell with the $17,000—what I want is his consent to have you box Jack Dempsey."

I hastened to assure Rickard that, though his great concern was to make the Dempsey match, he need have no fear about the money Gibson owed him. Billy sooner or later paid his debts.

As Tex got up to leave, he said, "Gene, you are going to win the championship from Jack Dempsey." (I subsequently learned Rickard was kidding me about this particular thing.)

"All I want is a chance to try," I replied.

TEX TAKES CHANCE

"How much do you think it will cost you to live a year after you became champion?" I thought this a rather curious thing for him to ask.

"Oh, $10,000 or $12,000 a year would certainly be all I could find use for," I said.

Tex laughed and added, "$70,000 or $80,000 will not pay your bills."

He underestimated, as I later found out.

Tex's interest in my annual money needs became understandable as I got to know him better.

JACK DEMPSEY

TEX RICKARD

We had numerous contacts after I won the championship and eventually I was taken into his confidence somewhat. The first consideration of all Tex's efforts was to get a good stake, something that would assure him of a decent income. He thought in terms of annuities, but, as far as I know, never established one.

This anxiety about secured income undoubtedly developed from his long experience as a gambler. Gamblers have their ups and downs. Tex knew the lean years as well as the fat ones. He tasted of the bitterness of adversity in his youth and, as he matured, wanted to secure himself against it in old age. But Tex was a born gambler, and though his reason dictated the setting up of an insurance annuity, his instincts were to take a chance.

He did and, unfortunately, his wife and child lost.

As the Rickard limousine pulled away from the curb, I saw the gap between plan and achievement bridged with the assistance of the great builder, Tex Rickard. My plan to fight my way to the point of recognition as a challenger for the heavyweight championship had been achieved.

The inspiration that came to me while talking to McReynolds on the Rhine River boat in the spring of 1919 was about to blossom forth. The years of planning, designing, training, fighting and climbing, had brought me to the mountain top from which I could see the promised land.

Though it is a fine achievement for a man to fight his way into a position of recognition as a serious contender for the highest honors that pugilism has to offer, it is quite another thing to get the match. I had double reason to be happy. I was a logical contender and Tex Rickard promised me the match.

Several days later I received, at Saratoga Springs, a telephone call from Tex Rickard. He said he was coming up to see me to talk over a Wills match to force Dempsey's hand.

WILLS SPURNS $200,000

During this conference between Rickard, Billy Gibson and myself, Rickard advised he had found out that unless I eliminated Wills, the New York State Boxing Commission would not recognize me as a challenger for the world's heavyweight championship. I agreed to fight Wills.

Rickard said: "I will give you a guarantee of $150,000."

"All right," said Tex, "the fight's on."

It was arranged that we should come to New York and sign the contract in the presence of the usual group of writers and photographers. We did this, but my prospective opponent, Harry Wills, and his manager, for reasons best known to themselves, failed to appear.

Tex offered Wills the same terms that I was to get. Wills was confident that the Boxing Commission would uphold his prior rights to contendership; so he refused to accept the match and the $200,000. He continued to pursue his peaceful attitude toward all mankind—excepting carefully selected setups.

Wills, poor fellow, was frightfully misguided from a financial point of view. Harry fought but one match after that in which he received a fair-sized purse. It was against Jack Sharkey, six days after my first fight with Jack Dempsey. He received something in the neighborhood of $25,000 and suffered a technical knockout in 13 rounds, thereby establishing the unsoundness of the commission's action in making him the leading contender and settling, definitely and finally, his pretensions.

There was a double tragedy occasioned by the Wills-Sharkey fight; the financial tragedy to Wills and the spiritual tragedy to Dempsey. Six days earlier Dempsey had lost his title to an upstart. Had he fought Wills instead of Tunney he would have probably won in a round or two, gotten more money, and retired with the championship. His name would have become immortal among athletes.

Dempsey, like Spartacus, would undoubtedly have become a tradition.

I have often wondered what his thoughts were as he sat, battered and disfigured, confined to a room in the Belmont Hotel, when the report arrived that Sharkey had easily whipped Wills.

Tomorrow Tunney will describe his knockout of Bartley Madden and the rowl that went up from the wolves, hungry for "pieces" of a rich Dempsey-Wills gate.

American Dollars Made Things Cheerful in Paris

COUNT BONI DE CASTELLANE AND HIS WIFE, ANNA GOULD

In the picture above you see the fashionable young Frenchman, who died lately, after his American wife had divorced him and married a prince. They are seen riding in the park, both on white horses, both in "the height of fashion" that would seem ridiculous today.

With his wife's money De Castellane built a magnificent palace in Paris and built up for himself the reputation of a great beau, successor to famous forerunners, Beau Brummell, Beau Nash and others.

He enjoyed the life and the money while he had both. Then his wife decided that she had financed his "lofty ambitions" long enough, got rid of him and married a genuine prince.

THIS WAY WENT GOULD MILLIONS

What happens to American dollars in the second generation is not important, and what a French count does with money that he marries is not important.

But it is interesting to think what old Jay Gould, who built up his fortune by hard work, would have said if he could have seen this fancy-dress party or even if he could have seen his son-in-law De Castellane. He was spared that experience. You will be interested principally in the changes in fashions and in the different ways, from generation to generation, in which human beings spend money that they do not earn.

Boston Artists Honored

Charles H. Woodbury and Miss Katharine Lane, the Boston artists, have been awarded the major prizes in painting and sculptuary by the National Academy of Design. These two fine persons will not receive as much notoriety as if they had hit a baseball over the centerfield fence, but all thoughtful persons will gratefully recognize that they have kept Boston at the head of the procession in the fine arts of this Nation.

Mr. Woodbury is 67 years old. His greatest honor came to him fifty-two years after he first applied brush to canvas. Young men should learn from this that they can afford to make fame slowly. Also, that the highest appreciation of the beauties of Nature—his prize painting was "The Changing Wind"—comes with the experience of advanced years.

More Time for the Turtle

A reader wants to know, "Why should a turtle live 200 years and a man only 70?" Of course, a man can get around and see things. Think how long it would take a turtle to get from one night club to another.

New York Day by Day

Avenue Parade

NEW YORK, Nov. 29—The Fifth ave. 5 o'clock promenade, reminiscent of the hearty days when Mrs. Belmont trumpeted in coach and four from the Plaza to the Waldorf, has been revived. Save it has moved a block eastward to Park ave. The renaissance of sauntering is attributable to drooping dividends.

The parade starts near the gold tower arching Park at 46th and usually ends at wide 57th. Now and then, there is a speckle of Broadway when a group of chorus chicks cluck along. And wasn't it Charles Hanson Towne, wide-eyed in admiration, who murmured: "If they just wouldn't speak!"

Here and there, too, is a grey old wolf of the club windows who has crept from his leather-cushioned lair to behold a bewildering world he on longer knows. Near the Ambassador, a thin sprig in striped trousers, ruled like a ledger, and lapeled with a gardenia, idles on the curb. Blumenthal—the ex-mayor's pal.

A movie star, pertly self-assured, skips out of the flower shop of Irene Hayes, flips a cigar gutterward, pauses and arches already red lips for another swipe. A whiskered son of Israel, smoothing Ghettoward, mumbles "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways!"

• • •

That fine editorialist, Idwal Jones, is one frequenter of Paris who never visted Harry's in rue Daunou, the Ritz "sweat room" or other rendezvous of Manhattan Parisians. He did go to Ciro's once, and, oddly enough, with a Jesuit priest from the Sorbonne, a historian of the Byzantine who loves bright lights, the hum of boulevards and cointreaux. While a band blared "Yes sir, that's my bay-bee," they argued the Port Royal controversy and Pascal's accuracy in his letters.

• • •

Mr. Jones is one of the wise Americans dining in those excellent dingy cafes, with corkscrew stairs to wine cellars, along the Boulevard Antoine. And, tiring of such cuisine, hies to Nantes and perhaps, boards a swaying stage to the coast of the Bay of Biscay. His is the France, far from the Place de la Concorde's incessent honk, most Francophiles contemplate after 50—declining days on the Vendeean shore with melons in the garden, a jar of shag, fresh sea winds in one's whiskers and, now and then, a joust at chess with M. le Cure.

• • •

A distingue in nomenclature comes to the barber shops. On a block in West 37th st., I was caught by the beckoning gilt of "Anthony's Tonsorial Studio." I stopped in. Anthony is Anthony Restaino, a bright son of Italy, winner of hair cutting medals in Rome, Paris, New York. Between pressure of hot towels, he declared that barbering was truly one of the fine arts. As indeed it may be!

Nothing has a livelier perk for the mind than a smooth shave and expert massage. The most vividly alert man I know goes to a barber shop every morning at 7:30 for these twin ministrations. I tried it once at the same hour and flared into the sunshine in a well tonsored glow. But the unbreakable habit of late sleeping precluded continuance so I began to try out the idea at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. But it didn't work. Early morning is the time. And why not a Seven-Thirty Shaving and Marching Club?

Hilarious tales come from Hollywood movie lots, about the clashing temperaments of the royal family—Lionel, Ethel and Jack—grouped for the Rasputin film recently. There was an assistant director who attempted to mollify Miss Barrymore in a tempestuous moment and was reward with a barrage of blistering epithets. Exhausting her ribald repertoire, she wound up limply with: "You badly dressed young man, you!"

They were talking of a lawn party for 1000 guests in one of Long Island's exclusive and carefully razored suburbs. Irvin Cobb was asked how he'd like to be the guest of honor. "I don't believe that many people would come to see me lynched," he gloomed.

Also there's Cobb's grand simile: "He has as much sense of direction as an egg-beater."

That New Deal

SO NOW WE'RE GOING to get that "new deal"!

Well, maybe. And again, maybe not. But one thing's sure—and write it down in your little book—

Elsie Robinson

DESPITE ALL CAMPAIGN PROPHESIES, IT WON'T BE UP TO MR. ROOSEVELT TO GIVE US THAT NEW DEAL. IT WILL BE UP TO US; TO YOU AND ME, AS INDIVIDUALS.

For no power on earth—no revised form of government or redistribution of wealth—can possibly give us a new deal in life unless and until we, ourselves, are ready for it.

And out of the one hundred and twenty-one million people in these United States, I'll wager not more than a few thousands could really use a new deal if you handed it to them.

For, now that all the campaign excitement is out of the way, the truth can be told, and it's up to us to face that truth.

Times were when we saw things and lived things pretty straight, we Americans. We didn't carry any excess fat over our ribs—or above our ears. But gradually—what with machines taking the roughage out of the day's jobs; slick ads filling us with a lot of de luxe notions, and easy money making it possible for us to gratify those notions—why, we went plain soft and silly.

We stopped depending on ourselves. We began depending entirely on machines. We stopped doing our own sewing, our own cooking, our own building, our own planting, our own walking—even our own thinking. Our food came out of tin cans. Our thoughts came off print paper. Our laughs came from a silver screen.

Our jobs? Nine times out of ten, we didn't care for them, had no pride in them—for there was no meaning in them. They weren't, in any real and salty sense, our jobs at all. They were just insignificant segments of some Big Fellow's Industrial Program and, though doing them filled our pockets, it didn't promote our personal pride, or power, or peace, one particle.

So always, what with having all the natural, significant jobs done for us and doing insignificant jobs ourselves, we were constantly restless and dissatisfied. And we bought things to try and quiet that discontent. Things—THINGS! THINGS!

How we piled them up and piled them up! Unnecessary gadgets. Darnfool thingamagigs. Cockeyed luxuries.

Why, I remember once, about four years ago, being so gummed up with idiot ideas that I went out and bought myself a black lace step-in. Now hanging a black lace step-in on me is just about as equivalent and even more absurd than putting earrings on a man-o'-war. But did I see the joke? No, stranger, I didn't! I'd gotten so that I really thought that black lace step-ins were a perfectly logical thing to have.

Just the other day, rummaging through my bureau, I turned the fool thing up. And was my face red! It was, partner. And I'm thanking the good, old-fashioned God, who forgives fools and gives them another chance, that it was!

So now I'm writing this article in a patched flannel shirt, clay daubed cords and battered mining boots, and thanking heaven that in half an hour I'm due to go out and get on the business end of a hoe and work up a little honest sweat.

Am I going to get a New Deal?

You're tootin' right I am, brother! And Roosevelt won't have to hand it to me, either. I'm going out to dig it for myself.

And I note that America is doing likewise—and grateful for the chance. It won't be easy for a while. It will, to be brutally frank, be the devil of a battle. Some of us won't make the grade, and the rest of us will have to help.

But we're on our way again. We've won our way back to the common sense and the hard work and the plain living that made us Real Guys once, before we all went ga-ga.

Just Folks

Man and Dog

My dog is very smart. He knows
My step upon the walk,
A certain interest he shows
When I begin to talk;
And it is plain he understands
The catalog of my commands.
He'll go and come to suit my whim
And I am very proud of him.

True courtesy he shows
To friends who come to visit me
As if their names he knows;
And he will try to bark away
The stranger, calling night or day.
Intelligent? There's not a doubt
That dog knows just what he's about.

But should another dog come by
And undertake to share
The overgenerous meals which I
For him each day prepare;
At once a fearful fight would start,
My dog is not so kind of heart
That he would sympathetic be
With dogs less fortunate than he.

And winds blow cold, we find
That being clever's not enough.
Man also must be kind.
A dog may be both wise and cute
But to the end he's just a brute
While man, however wise he be,
Must prove his worth with sympathy.

Mr. Drinkwater Hears Voice From the Street

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American

WE SHARE IN THE GENERAL admiration for much of that which has been written by John Drinkwater, albeit the first act of his Lincoln play takes too many liberties with the truths of history. We prefer his poetry to his plays. And, assuredly, Americans are glad to have him visit them, and will want to make his sojourn pleasant. We wish, however, that at the complimentary dinner given him in recognition of his genius as a writer, that he had refrained from observations on the debts. And yet we are sure that he meant nothing offensive in what he said.

When he referred to newspapers seeking to stir up strife and cause international ill will that leads to war, he may easily have been referring to certain papers in London and Paris that have been offensive in their attacks on America because of the debts. The papers here opposing the transfer of the debts from the people who borrowed the money to those who loaned the money, have not indulged in sword-rattling of any sort. Aside from this, Mr. Drinkwater said:

"I do know that no decent American—and America is full of decent people—thinks of the Englishman as a person who doesn't want to pay what he owes. And I know that of decent Englishman—and if I may say so, England is quite full of decent people—there isn't one that doesn't want to pay his debts."

All of which is quite true. We have said it many times in this column, and in opposition to the transfer of the debts.

• • •

No Hatred Held Here for England

We have also said many times that, of all the debtor nations, England has received the smallest consideration in the settlement made some years ago. We were much more considerate of France, Italy and all the rest. But that was due in large measure, to the very qualities in the Englishman to which Mr. Drinkwater refers—his sportsmanship and indisposition to beg off on an obligation. Stanley Baldwin asked no better terms than he was given in the negotiations and our representatives could hardly urge upon him better terms than he asked. The result is that England today, bearing a much heavier proportionate burden than any of the other debtor nations, and in much more serious economic and financial condition, does appeal to the honest sympathy of the average American. In fact, many believe that there should be a reconsideration of the English debt with the view to putting England on a par with France in the consideration shown.

There is no hate of England over here because of the debts or for any other reason. There is regret that she should have associated herself with others, undeserving of more consideration, in a common cause.

Brady Answers as "Man in Street"

It was fortunate, I think, that William A. Brady, the theatrical producer, gave Mr. Drinkwater the view of the average American at this dinner. He was there to pay tribute to the literary genius of a notable Englishman, but he disassociated this tribute from any disposition to transfer the debts. Thus, he said:

"I'm a man in the street, and, perhaps I'm in high class company tonight, but, perhaps, sometimes it's good for high class company to hear the man in the street. The man in the street thinks that Europe owes us our debts. We taxed our people to raise that money and, if it is not paid, we'll have to pay them in our income taxes."

Reading the memoirs and letters of distinguished foreign visitors, particularly Englishmen, I have been impressed with their apparent incapacity to understand American sentiment or our American life. The reason is patent—they never meet the man in the street. They seek only "high class company," or are "monopolized by it" and htus they are given an erroneous idea of what America is thinking. This has resulted at times in sad miscalculation in the determination by other nations of their American policy.

Failed to Hear Average American

In the earliest days of the republic the distinguished visitor from Europe never came into contact with the people here. They were wined and dined by the Hamiltons, the Cabots, the Rufus Kings, the Christopher Gores, the Binghams, and the Otises, and they carried away strange views. They learned from these that democracy would never be tolerated in America, that republican institutions were a rather sad experiment, that men like Jefferson and Madison were "demagogues" and "Anarchists," without sense or decency, and so they reported home. Thus we find more than one English minister predicting to his government the early fall of the republic and the crushing of the democratic spirit. And on these representations policies were formed.

They were formed without any reference to the sentiment of the American people.

"Man in Street" Wants Debts Paid

Perhaps, we wonder!—Europe conceived the notion that the American people were not only ready, but eager to assume the debts of all the debtor nations from too much "high class company" here. It could not possibly have predicated any such theory from talking with the man in the street. The foreign statesman has again failed to divine America, because he has failed to take the sentiment or to learn the sentiment of the average American.

Right or wrong, Mr. Brady was the voice of America at this dinner for Mr. Drinkwater, and he rendered a service not only to the country but to the honored guest by speaking right out like a plain, blunt man. If Mr. Drinkwater will take a survey of the opinions of the great mass of the people he will find this to be true, and, after all, wise foreign policies can only be built upon the truth.

And, seeking the reason, should Dr. Drinkwater question these men in the street, he would not find that their position on the debts is based on any hatred or dislike of the debtor nations. He would be told that America does not owe the debts; "that she has been more than generous in the settlements made, with possibly the exception of England." That with a great deficit, appalling taxes, business prostration, and 11,000,000 men on the streets, America not only does not have the obligation, but does not have the capacity to pay for all the debtor nations of the world. He will be told that those nations, with the possible exception of some of the smallest, do have the capacity to pay." That all of them are spending enormously every year on preparations for war, and that by reducing on war expenditures in times of peace to the extent of the money due on the debts, they have the capacity to pay without increasing their own taxes.

This is what he would hear from the man of the street. It may be wrong—it sounds like common sense. And it does not sound like international hate at all.

We ended the war by entering—and brought peace on the battlefields. We took no reparations and no territory—and thus made our contribution to lasting peace. We have reduced the debts on money loaned which came from our own borrowings—as a contribution to peace. If, on top of all this, we are told that peace can only come by the dumping of all these debts of all the nations in our lap, the average man will say that it is far too much to ask.

AMERICAN'S HOME COLLEGE

Questions and answers prepared by members of the faculty of the College of the City of New York outline what they consider a well-educated person ought to know.

TODAY'S QUESTION

This question will be repeated and answered tomorrow by Dr. F. E. Null, instructor in physics.

YESTERDAY'S QUESTION

What is the meaning of "foreign exchange"?

By MYRON L. HOCH,
Department of Economics.

The expression "foreign exchange" ordinarily stands for the rate at which the money of one country can be exchanged for the money of another country. Dealers in foreign exchange buy and sell claims on the circulating media of other countries.

Debts resulting from international trade have to be met with the currency of the country in which payment is to be made since e.g. American money does not circulate widely in England.

How, therefore, is the rate of exchange between American dollars and the British pound sterling determined? Assuming that both countries are on the gold standard (England has been off the standard since September, 1931), each kind of money represents a certain quantity of gold.

The dollar contains 23.22 grains of fine gold and the pound sterling 112.99 grains of fine gold. Thus the gold content of the pound is 4.866 times greater than that of a dollar. When the pound sterling can be bought in New York for $4.866 the rate of exchange is said to be at "par."
